POLICE OFFICIALS remove the body of an unidentified young woman. She was found slumped at the foot of the steps at 4115 Bonner Rd. The attractive woman wore black slacks, a black blouse and a fur collared black jumper. Police say an unidentified caller told them where the body could be found and that when they arrived they could find no identification. A silver box-like purse was found on the landing beside the dead woman but none of the papers found in it revealed her identity.

Pretty girl found dead; kin sought

Fingerprint experts of the Baltimore City Police Department have identified the body of a pretty girl who was found slumped at the foot of the steps at 4115 Bonner Road on Monday as that of Miss Kathy Field.

Police have been unable to locate the next of kin and have no information on how the body got to the Bonner Road address or when.

Police were called to the scene at 12:05 p.m. and found the young woman dressed in black slacks, blouse and jumper. When the AFRO arrived the then unidentified body was still on the steps. Her silver purse was at her feet.

Dozens of residents in the block long housing complex were interviewed but none could offer any information on the dead woman.

The medical examiner's office is conducting tests to determine cause of death of the young woman believed to be between 18-20.

Final tests on the body have not been completed. At AFRO presstime no one had claimed the body.

Singer James Brown here to protest concert ban

They don't respect us as human beings. We're still in that same old thing. It's just a thing that has to be changed, and we're going to change it."

"We don't care who don't like it. Let them say what they want to say cause ain't nobody gonna burn down buildings anymore."

"People are not going to sit down and let it go down that way and them cats downtown ain't gonna tell all the black people in the city what they are going to do or see. They just can't control that no more."

"We pay taxes here and we have a right to have our own black culture at the Civic Center, especially when they let Tom Jones come from abroad and have a date there. He takes all the money out of the community but we leave it here, . ."

The words are those of multimillionaire James Brown, owner of Radio Station WEBB here in Baltimore and the nation's No. 1 Soul Brother, so-billed because of his popularity as a soul singer.

Mr. Brown came to Baltimore this week to make known his protests against rulings of the Civic Center Commission which denied him permission to stage a concert but have granted permission for a similar concert to Tom Jones, the English - born singer.

Mr. Brown remained in the city until Wednesday. Since then, recordings of his protest have been aired on his radio station.

On Thursday morning a special meeting of the commission reversed the decision and granted Mr. Brown a late May date for a show which Diamond Jim Sears, WEBB station manager describes as "strictly Soul."

Al Garner, national sales director of James Brown Broadcasting, Inc. told the AFRO that "the show will definitely be a James Brown show but we added the Mighty Clouds of Joy, a gospel group, to widen the spectrum of appeal."

He said his negotiations with the Civic Center Commission revealed that "they were somewhat hostile to us for attacking" them on the issue of banning black performers from appearing there.

Both Mr. Garner and Mr. Sears credit their success to "the rally and support of the black community which is solidly behind us."

To disperse the implication that the show will be a religious one Mr. Sears quipped "Can you see James Brown on stage singing, "When The Roll Is Called Up Yonder I'll Be There?""

Expert in karate opens school here

Chull Hee Park, the youngest recipient of the Black Belt in karate history, has established his own school here, he announced this week.

Park will teach the ancient art of defense at the Master Park Chull Karate Institute, located at 17 Franklin St.

Park was the youngest man in the world to receive his Black Belt at 15. Since then only five other persons have been awarded this honor. Korean karate utilizes both kicking and hands. Japanese karate involves mostly use of hands.

Park is a former professor of physical education at the Korean Military Academy and was a key figure in the training of presidential police for the late Syngman Rhee, of South Korea.

BASKETBALL FAN — James Daughton is a blind man who attends and listens to games played by the Bullets, his favorite basketball team on radio. Like hockey fan Rosalyn Elsezy, whose story appeared in last Friday's AFRO, Mr. Daughton follows the play on the radio but enjoys being in the crowd atmosphere of the Civic Center when the game is on. Accompanying him in the photo at left is Navassa Brown, himself a long-time fan of the Bullets, who took the blind man "under his wing" and helped him to find his seat and get enough popcorn all during the season.

Wilt backs out on bout with Ali

UPI Sports Writer

HOUSTON (UPI) — Muhammad Ali's proposed 12-round fight with 7-foot, 2 Wilt Chamberlain, the greatest scorer in basketball history, was cancelled after a two-hour dispute Wednesday when Chamberlain refused to agree to terms of the contract.

Chamberlain had previously agreed to the terms, but at the last minute he backed out of the bout, four years in the making, because his counsel said he would have to pay too much taxes on the one-night, $500,000 paycheck.

Chamberlain and his attorney, arrived at 12:45 p.m. in a helicopter, and met with officials of the Astrodome and Top Rank the promotional group, before refusing to go through with the bout.

Ali had called Chamberlain "the strongest man in the world. It's no joke fight."

Ali, the former heavyweight champion, left the news conference a half hour after the scheduled 3 p.m. start of the news conference for the official signing, and he never returned to hear the doleful announcement that the fight would not take place.

The promoters had predicted that Chamberlain would make $1-million on the bout, which they expected to gross $10-million to make it the second richest boxing event in history.

He had been guaranteed $500,000 against 25 per cent of the revenue for the fight, which was to be telecast on closed circuit.

Ali, five years younger than the 34-year-old basketball star for the Los Angeles Lakers, was to get a guarantee of $1-million or 45 per cent of the revenue.

Having to catch up familiar role for Bullets in playoff

The necessity of coming from behind in the National Basketball Association playoffs is nothing new to the Bullets. They've gotten familiar with the catch-up role in two previous series with titles at stake.

Coach Gene Shue and his charges were down, 0-2, to the New York Knicks before rallying to win in seven games. And they were behind early in three of their four victories over the Philadelphia 76ers in their battle for the Atlantic Division crown.

So, despite the importance of a fast start in a short playoff, Baltimore fans are not yet ready to concede that Wednesday's loss to Milwaukee means second place.

The Bullets took it easy yesterday (Thursday), worked lightly today (Friday) and are now concentrating on getting even Sunday at Civic Center.

Lew Alcindor put it mildly after the Bucks beat the Bullets, 98-88, in the opener.

"Wes (Unseld) played me the way he usually did," Alcindor said. "But I think maybe he forgot what it is like."

"It's been a while since Wes played against me. Maybe he just forgot how to do it."

Unseld didn't think there was any sense talking about his duel with Alcindor.

"Lew didn't do anything different," he said. "I just played him the way I was told to play him. I'm not up for a head-to-head duel with Alcindor. This is the Bullets against the Bucks."

Shue was far from being disappointed after the game.

"I think it's fortunate we only lost by 10." Shue said. "During the half when we were down by eight, I told them that we were lucky. We were playing YMCA ball — dribble down the floor and give it to your opponent.

"I could tell the guys were down. There was no response in the huddles. They wanted to win it, but they just didn't have the legs or emotion to win," he said.

"I think what we've just come through played a big part in the game tonight," Unseld said. "Beating New York was tough and I'm just like the other guys on this club — tired."

Bucks coach Larry Costello credited a "fantastic performance" by Alcindor and the poor play of the Bullets for the win.

"Lew was just great," Costello said. "But the Bullets can play better and they probably will Sunday."

But then Costello said, "We'll probably play better, too. I know we can."

"It was a funny game," Costello said. "Baltimore didn't do anything we didn't expect them to do. They played us just like they played New York. They slowed the ball down and tried to control the game."

But Baltimore didn't control the game, and if anyone did, it was Oscar Robertson.

Robertson ran the Bucks' offense and contributed 22 points.

"I think maybe Baltimore was a little tired from the New York series," Oscar said. "I didn't watch it, but I heard it was tough."

Frazier in rivals' corner doesn't bother Bob Foster

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — Light-heavyweight champion Bob Foster has dismissed reports that heavyweight champion Joe Frazier will be in challenger Ray Anderson's corner when Foster and Anderson meet in Saturday night's title bout.

"He sure isn't going to do his fighting for him," says Foster.

Anderson and Frazier are both managed by Yancey Durham and Frazier knocked Foster out last Nov. 18 when Foster tried to move up to the heavyweight division.

Foster says the only time he has had trouble with a tight heavy was "when I couldn't catch him.

"Mr. Foster is going to find out," Anderson said. "He's going to think I'm a heavyweight."

Urge market investigation

Senator Verda F. Welcome has called for a Legislative Council investigation of alleged improper handling of leases in the Lexington Market.

Several merchants at the market have complained about difficulty in renewing leases and unusual restrictions imposed in leases negotiated, she said.

In a letter to Senator William James, chairman of the Legislative Council, the Civic Center when the game is on. Accompanying him in the photo at left is Navassa Brown, himself a long-time fan of the Bullets, who took the blind man "under his wing" and helped him to find his seat and get enough popcorn all during the season.

between sessions arm of the General Assembly, Senator Welcome has asked for "an investigation of alleged improprieties with an eye toward corrective legislation if it is found necessary."

Old Taylor Presents: 6 Ingenious Americans.
These black men helped change the world!

Nearly all of these Ingenious Americans were poor and came up the hard way. Most had to work their way through school. Yet each, in his own way, made a lasting contribution to mankind.

These busts are available for just $5 each (that's what they cost us). They're 8" tall, made of antique bronze cast stone, and bear a complete history of the subject. To get them—just fill out the coupon below.

Matthew Henson was an assistant to Admiral Peary on his now-famous expeditions. On the final trip, when Peary lay exhausted and crippled with frostbite, it was Henson who pushed on and became the first man to locate and stand on the North Pole.

Dr. Charles Drew, an expert on blood and its components, introduced the idea of a blood bank. Today, when someone needs blood, the hospital makes a call to the local blood bank. Within minutes the proper type is there. Dr. Drew made it possible to save lives by storing blood.

Dr. Dan Williams worked as a barber to get through high school. Eight years after graduating from medical school, he opened a man's chest and sewed up a knife wound of the heart sac. Dr. Williams performed the world's first heart operation.

Norbert Rillieux developed a fast, inexpensive method of refining sugarcane in 1846. Before this time, it was a luxury for the very few. Because of Rillieux, sugar became inexpensive enough to make all our lives a little sweeter.

Lewis Howard Latimer, son of an escaped slave, became an electrical engineer and an inventor. He invented a method for making carbon filaments in an incandescent lamp, which he patented. Eventually he became a noted aide to Thomas Edison and one of the Edison Pioneers. Today, a school in Brooklyn, New York, bears his name.

Benjamin Banneker became a prominent surveyor, mathematician and astronomer. When Major L'Enfant, the original architect of Washington, D.C., packed up and quit, the job was turned over to Banneker, who had transcribed the Major's plans. Banneker played a key role in putting the White House, the Treasury and the Capitol where they are today!
