Students get the dope

p[illegible]'s connections.

"[illegible]ush "pad" which has psycho[illegible]ics, a white mink-cove[illegible] [illegible] conveniences including [illegible]ala, is not a hush-hush ad[illegible] [illegible] on the campus.

SIDE ENTRANCE

"[illegible]ybody just knows, that's all," [illegible]dents confessed, adding, "You [illegible] some steps and enter from the [illegible] into a sanparlor."

[illegible]e dope ring that operates from [illegible]ons inside the "hallowed halls of [illegible]ning," snakes its way down from [illegible]ecsore to students and then leaves [illegible]campus to connect up with mm[illegible] "kindergarten-and-dropout" status [illegible] the suppliers.

[illegible]e unlearned, unlettered "gang-[illegible]" are far more wealthy than pro[illegible]rs or students will ever be but [illegible] speak the same language, the [illegible]ge of DOPE.

[illegible] dispatch "re-up men" to repl[illegible] supplies and take in the money [illegible]pointed times. They hold regular [illegible]phone conversations with profes[illegible]rs and college students. They even [illegible]et together to "rap" and otherwise communicate.

MY MAN IS FINE

Narcotics Squad files disclose that a youth, age 16, leaves his high school campus after checking in each morning and during his absence speeds around a circle of junior and senior high schools "making deliveries."

Back in class later, he goes on with his studies. Among his possessions is a "fast back" high priced car, numerous costly suits and shoes and a cash box brimming with money. Among the pupils he is "fine" and "hot stuff."

Police state he is so "slick" they can never catch him with anything on him and consequently he cannot be charged with narcotics law violations.

"He knows no names of anybody and keeps his mouth shut," investigating officers state.

WOMAN WITH SHOPPING BAG

Recently the AFRO received a telephone call from a mother who said her junior high school son told her about a middle-aged woman who stands on the sidewalk near the school each day and hands out "pills" to pupils at recess and closing time.

"Can't you do something?" the mother asked.

When referred to the police, the mother said, "I called them. I told them but the woman is still there."

The mother also revealed school authorities when notified replied, "We'll look into it." However, the mother states, "She's still there. She gets out of a car and is soon invisible as the kids crowd around her.

"We used to complain about the ice cream man pulling up to the school and the kids getting cones and pop sickles but now we have the Dope Woman who gets their lunch money and every penny they can beg, borrow or steal."

SHOPPING CENTER SALES

Recently a parent remarked how the students of several neighboring schools swarm to a shopping center "like ants" and head for their dope peddlers every day after closing time.

The parent said standing there and watching she noted security guards and other grown men making the trade of dope for money "like lightning" with hundreds of pupils.

The recent case of a runaway junior high school girl disclosed to police as they made a "merry chase around, across, up and down town" to the many "houses' the young people frequent.

PIG PEN PADS

Observations uncovered the fact that at the "houses" literally tribes of young people from 12 to 18 gather each night to take dope and mingle. "All are pig-pen filthy," an officer said.

A 16-year-old girl who had disappeared from home over 30 days ago was traced there and finally apprehended.

Pine Street physicians and police determined she had an "old marital condition," veneral disease and was living as "man and wife" with a 20-year-old youth.

The 8th grade girl admitted she lied to her lover about her parents being mean and beating her.

The young man disclosed he had taken her in because of sympathy and she appreciated his taking care of her.

He said he had been deserted as a child and provided her with food, clothes and shelter "because I know what it means to be alone, hungry and home'ess."

COLLEGE PRESIDENTS FLEE

Two Novembers ago a local college president whispered to close friends the fact that he was resigning "in due time" and taking a private job. "Packing up and running like a rat leaving a burning barn," he grinned joyfully.

The dope problem was growing by leaps and bounds, he revealed. "I can't stand it," he said.

Also in recent years another college president confided in close friends at a dinner party, "Tripping teachers, kids in bushes sleeping in class, the college newspaper loaded with dirt and filth and 4-letter words. Like they say, Man, this isn't my bag. I'm getting out and I mean out."

COLLEGE NEWSPAPER CLAIMS

"You can buy dope on the campus quicker than a pencil," a college newspaper editor write in his column. The publication also contains an unsigned release that a co-ed had died of an "overdose" on the campus.

It adds that her parents who reside in another East Coast state, wanted an investigation but no probe was ever opened.

Other campus papers contain veiled advertisements of Dope Pads, Coffee Houses and spots where couples, male or female, can "make it together."

Three small printing firms recently revealed they turned down cash-on-the-barrel jobs from certain college publications "because the trash they had in them was so hot and so dirty it would burn our presses up."

Other case studies in the AFRO collection are too numerous to print.

NEXT WEEK

NEXT WEEK — PART IV reveals where immediate help for dope addicts can be obtained free of charge. Also, the concluding section of the informative series will contain Dope Control methods as suggested by government agencies, the police department and authorities in the fields of crime control.

Dr. Quarles to get U. of Maryland doctorate

Nearly 4500 students at the College Park campus of the University of Maryland will graduate at the 10 a.m. June 8 commencement ceremonies, in the William P Cole Jr. Student Activities building.

The commencement speaker will be John E. Corbaly, Jr., who is scheduled to become 13th president of the University of Illinois in September. Corbaly, former chancelor and president of Syracuse University, will receive an honorary Doctor of Laws Degree.

Other degree recipients are Richard Franko Goldman, president of the Peabody Institute in Baltimore and a noted music composer and conductor, who will receive an honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree; and Dr. Benjamin Arthur Quarles, head of the history department at Morgan State College since 1953, who will receive an honorary Doctor of Humanities Degree.

NEW YORK — For the first time in its 217-year history, Columbia University awarded an honorary degree posthumously — to the late civil rights leader Whitney Young Jr. His honorary Doctor of Laws degree was accepted by his widow.
