The Childhood things that Children love.
And as they grow the long years through
That love for him keeps growing too.
Until they learn the full extent
Of what a Father's love has meant
The secrets he's concealed within How really wonderful he's been late Whitney M. Young Jr. as executive director of the organization.

In assuming leadership of the powerful civil rights group, Jordan said he would seek to maintain a "consistent dialogue" between black and white people, and did not believe in endorsing any political candidate.

Jordan spoke at a press conference called in the Vanguard building to announce his selection.

When asked whether tension between the races had increased, he answered that "Dialogue and conversation must continue if we are to have understanding on both sides."

The tall, broad-shouldered man, stressed the seriousness of the country's racial problem shortly after his selection was announced by James A. Linen, president of the league and chairman of the executive committee of Time Inc.

"At a time when there is an ominous and potentially explosive rise in unemployment in our Northern and Southern ghettos, the black and other minorities and the poor see increasing signs of indifference to their plight.

"The men and women of the Urban League are once again challenged to respond with the kind of pragmatic and creative programs for change which the nation has come to expect from this organization."

Jordan had much praise for the administration of his predecessor, the late Whitney M. Young Jr. "when asked how his own program might differ.

He said, "My approach will be my approach; whether that will be interpreted as radical, moderate or conservative will not be for me to judge."

Jordan, who has served as an aide fund raiser in his administration of the UNCF, said he would not assume his new job until about the end of the year because he wanted to fulfill a commitment to lead a campaign for $10 million for the fund.

Until then, Harold R. Sims, deputy director of the Urban League, will continue as acting director.

Jordan went to high school in Atlanta, then was graduated from DePauw University, in Greencastle, Ind., and the Howard University School of Law.

He attained nationwide attention in 1961 when he led Charlayne Hunter into the University of Georgia through a mob of white protesters in a landmark in the drive for integration of Southern schools.

In his rise as a civil rights leader, he has been field director in Georgia for the NAACP and director of the Voter Education Project for the Southern Regional Council.

He has held fellowships at Harvard's Institute of Politics, the John F. Kennedy School of Government and the Metropolitan Applied Research Center.

Jordan is married to the former Shirley M. Yarbrough. They have one daughter.

istration from Stanford in 1963 and has done post doctoral work at Harvard University.

His experience has been: 1960-1961 Teacher (science) Arcata Union high School, Arcata, California.

1961-1963 Teacher and Social Studies Team Leader (history, sociology), Cubberley High School, Palo Alto, California.

1964-1965 Assistant to the Dean, School of Education, Stanford University.

1965-1966 Assistant Director, Carnegie School Board Studies, School of Education, Stanford University.

1966-67 Washington Intern in Education: Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary for Legislation, Department of HEW.

1968-Assistant Professor of Education, University of California at Berkeley.

He is the author of a number of articles and co-author of three books on educational problems and solutions.

At the Tuesday night interview, Dr. Guthrie began the two and one-half hours session by stating he had no "long speech."

Beginning the questioning by board members was Stephen McNiernay who asked Dr. Guthrie "In studies of large urban scholl centers, what are the problemsu?"

The reponse by the candidate was: "Race racism and raw discrimination. If you corollate race and ethnic groups, blacks and brown people on the low end of the totem pole." He felt that "delivery of services" and "methods" of delivery were most crucial in an urban school scene.

On the question of aid to private schools, Dr. Guthrie said he believed in the separation of church and state.

The discipline issue was brought up by a parent. Dr. Guthrie said he took a balanced view of the problem. He noted he could look at the problems both ways.

He felt that parents "should have clear-cut action" as well as teachers in the area of disciplining children who assault a teacher or "a teacher who assaults a student."

He told Edward McDaniels of the Edmondson School Student Council that "Students are better qualified than ever to help run their schools.

He stated he was "weak in education among young children" when a member of the audience asked his opinion on the goals and aims of elementary schools.

Asked, "What about the relevance of test scores to inner city children?" Dr. Guthrie said, "I would rather see an equality of services in all the schools and not have test scores the sole criterion for measuring the ability of students."

In this area he elaborated saying he would concentrate on providing equal curricula to all city schools and noted he felt this was not the case now.

One parent asked, "Should Baltimore have a black superintendent?" He responded, "If a person has equal qualifications to mine, Baltimore should have a black superintendent."

Asked, "What experience have you had with poor blacks?," he said, "I went to school with blacks and poor people in high school. This is not to say though that I grew up in a black ghetto, but I was poor as a youngster."

Evaluation schemes, he felt, were tied to teacher performance. "There should be a reward system for those who perform well. I want every student to be able to read."

The interview was concluded with Dr. Guthrie stating if he found racism in the schools he would "not tolerate it under any circumstances." He stated when asked by a board member that he would not accept any salary from other positions if chosen as superintendent.

The interview with Dr. Guthrie ended at 10 p.m.

The next interview with a candidate was scheduled for Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. However, board President Karwacki issued a statement Wednesday stating that the next candidate Dr. George P. Young, head of schools in St. Paul, Minn. withdrew his name because daily newspapers in St. Paul and Baltimore had published his appearance before the actually appeared for the interview.

Other interviews are scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday of next week at 7:30 p.m. The next two candidates are expected to be black.

up.

She recalled how long ago he used to run to her after a bad dream at night. As she looked at his empty bed, she wept bitter tears.

A minister told the teacher-mother, "Keep faith in God. Ask him to return your child whole, safely and well". But her tears are still falling.

GOING AWAY WITH MY FRIENDS

A wealthy Baltimore attorney had adopted his second wife's son as his own and enabled him to obtain a scholarship to a sophisticated boarding school, away from public school children."

A recent newspaper article disclosed the next and final part of the story.

First there was the note he left on his bedroom door. He was home for spring vacation, "I'm going away with my friends. I don't know when I'll be back. Don't worry."

Then came the long distance call from California. The youth and his friend and three other East Coast youths had been robbed and slain by unknown assailants on a lonely highway.

HATED HIS TEACHER

The stresses children undergo are many and most often unknown to adults.

Who would think a teenaged boy who, the teacher states, was the toughest, "baddest boy in Baltimore," would go away with his feelings hurt because she told him so.

This is exactly what happened.

After "Butch" had performed in class "like a clown" since September, after he had come from the principal's office for the 20th time, his teacher finally told him, "you are the worst child I have ever seen in my life. You're what they call a bad boy. The worst in this city."

She had lost her "cool" and couldn't help it. He had tried her patience just once too often.

The next day he was absent. That was in April. After he told his parents, "I hate that teacher," he disappeared and has not been heard from since.

BRING ME A HAIRCUT

Recently, the same happened to a 14-year-old boy whose teacher sided with his parents and told him, "Bring me a haircut tomorrow or don't come back until you do." He also left home and has not returned.

Deprived of everything except his very soul, an elderly grandfather brought his teenaged grandaughter to Juvenile Court last week.

She was one of the 44 per cent of the school population termed "truants" and he was tired of worrying when she stayed away three or four days.

His daughter and son-in-law were dead. He and his wife were trying to bridge the generation gap and rear the three grandchildren.

NO CLOTHES, NO LUNCH

The court made tried to hide "tears himself as he heard the father pretty girl say she—could not go to school in second-hand, old-fashioned, long dresses and with no lunch money.

"I ran away because I grew tired of my grandaddy and grandma don't have enough money for me."

A social worker said the family which depends public assistance to give the children clothes, food and shelter after the master divorced through testimony that the grandfather needed help but was too proud to ask.

NEXT WEEK

Why do some children leave every comfort of a good home to live with their friends in squalor and rags? A recent invasion by police of a vacant Northwest Baltimore house uncovered them sleeping on the floors and enjoying it. They told the reasons in court. This and other true stories could enlighten parents, maybe so, maybe not, since the reasons why children leave home are as numerous as the kids them-
