Dvorak's 'Requiem Mass' a success at Lyric concert

By ADAH K. JENKINS

Black vocalists lent distinction to the performance of Dvorak's "Requem Mass" at the Lyric in two of the season's closing midweek concerts, under the baton of Sergiu Comissiona, with the Baltimore Symphony.

A Baltimore soprano, Loreita Young, has made fame for herself since graduating from Peabody, followed by winning first place in the Munich Competition and numerous appearences in concerts abroad and in this country.

A command White House concert with the Boston Opera led to a season with that distinguished company.

Personal charm and artistics handling of her lovely voice made hers an important addition to the solo roster of the Requiem.

• • •

Mezzo soprano was Carolyn Stanford, a native of Philadelphia, and graduate of Curtis Institute, followed by study at the Academy of Music in Vienna on a Whitney Fellowship.

Her excellent vocal attainments were demonstrated at the Lyric as they have been in appearances with the Philadelphia, Cleveland and San Francisco Orchestras and with the Boston and New York Opera Companies.

Seth McCoy, tenor, a native of North Carolina like Miss Young, is an assured favorite of Baltimore audiences, having sung with the Baltimore Symphony in "Messah."

His performance of professional finish dates to his early days as soloist with the Robert Shaw Chorale, and the famous Jubilee Singers.

• • •

The baitone role was taken ably by Ara Berberian, now in his third season with the San Francisco Opera, in which he has performed more than fifteen roles. As an invited soloist, he has appeared at Tanglewood, Marlboro, Aspen and Ann Arbor Festivals.

Maestro Commissiona shared honors with the soloists by his admirable handling of the orchestra and the Peabody and Symphony Choruses, which were trained by Gregg Smith and William Phemister.

He was accorded an enthusiastic reception from the audience at Carnegie Hall for the Baltimore Symphony concert there last month.

• • •

Attending the event was a bus of local concert goers, mostly from the Women's Association of the Symphony, which was arranged by Mrs. Joseph Sherboe, assisted by Mrs. William Nation.

Among those present were Mrs. Paul Henderson and Miss Hermione Wharton, recently elected to the board of directors of the Women's Association.

Mrs. Gladys Derry and Mrs. Virginia Hardy, of the Association, were co-hostesses of the very successful Lyric concert bus service for the midweek concerts.
