Mr. John H. Murphy, III, President
Afro-American Newspapers
628 North Eutaw Street
Baltimore, Maryland, 21201

The Tuesday, June 8, 1971 issue of the Baltimore Afro-American displays an advertisement listing Monumental City Bar Association members endorsing the candidacy of George L. Russell, Jr. for Mayor of Baltimore.

I have not endorsed George L. Russell, Jr. I have not attended a Monumental City Bar Association meeting where either the Association or individual lawyers endorsed George L. Russell, Jr. for Mayor of Baltimore. I shall not endorse George L. Russell, Jr.

I consider the printing of the advertisement as a libel, improperly quoting my impression. I shall expect the Baltimore Afro-American to print a prominent retraction.

Linwood G. Koger, Jr.

AFRO policy

Political advertising is generally handled as a separate classification by newspapers. It requires a rate which must be prepaid in advance of the insertion of the advertising copy.

The AFRO-AMERICAN Newspaper accepts political advertising from all registered political candidates.

The responsibility for the language in political advertising is with the political candidate or his or her representatives and political advertising is acceptable to the newspaper so long as it is understood that said advertisement will carry a line at the bottom of the advertisement stating by whose authority the advertisement was submitted, and that at the top of the advertisement the newspaper will insert "This is a paid political advertisement."

So long as these requirements are met and the advertising copy meets the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspaper's standards which forbid offensive, vulgar, abusive or inaccurate material, said political advertising is acceptable.

Film on baby feeding available

Babies are individuals, and their hunger cannot always be regulated by the clock, explains "Baby Feeding," a 15-minute, color film available for loan from the State Department of Health and Mental Hygiene.

But it is dismayinf for the young parents of a first baby to have his wails disrup ttheir sleep three hours before the routine feeding time. What to do — let him cry out.

Parents are reminded that they should show some flexibility in feeding times. Feed the baby when he is hungry; give him as much formula as he wants; make him comfortable while he is being fed.

If a baby refuses the formula during the feeding, he may have swallowed air and should be held against the shoulder for a few minutes to bring up the air bubble; then he probably will accept more of tre formula. If there are unusual or persistent feeding problems, a pediatrician should be consulted.

Suggested for general audiences for senior, high school through adult level, the film is recommended especially for pre-marriage and babysitter classes, patients maternal and child health clinics, and parent education groups.

It may be borrowed without charge in Maryland from the Film Services, Maryland State Department of Health and Mental Hygiene, 301 W. Preston St.; Phone: 383-2635. Time should be allowed to preview and to arrange for a discussion leader.
