Civic Center director Jennifer gets $ million profit plaque

By RODGER MATTHEWS

"The staff and I are very much thrilled to be recognized by the Civic Center Commission by receiving a handsome plaque in appreciation for a very fine job on the occasion of the Civic Center's one million dollar revenue celebration breakfast."

These are the words of Harold J. Jennifer Jr., Executive Director of the Civic Center Commission, after he and his staff were awarded a plaque from the commission for a job well done.

For the first time since the Civic Center has been in operation, the budgling has made a profit.

According to statistics supplied by Mr. Jennifer, the Civic Center is now $24,000 in the black.

• • •

"We have a particularly efficient staff," said Mr. Jennifer, told the AFRO, "which operates under the guidance of a most outstanding high caliber, talented seven-man commission."

The plaque was presented by commission chairman Philip Goodman at a breakfast, attended by Major D'Alesandro, Board of Estimates representatives, major sports personalities and others.

Mr. Jennifer gave all of the credit for the success to his staff of 44 people.

He then thanked the Baltimore Clippers, as well as the Bullets, and said that practically every show held at the Civic Center helped the cause.

Mr. Jennifer has very high hopes for the future.

The roller derby has brought a lot of attention to the Civic Center.

Mr. Jennifer estimates that over 6,000 people have come into the roller derby each time it has been held and he expects even more.

Mr. Jennifer went on to explain that the commission currently has a request before the Maryland State Legislature for a $2 million grant to construct an additional 5,000 seat auditorium over the existing Exhibit Halls to provide for year-round conventions.

These and other events will bring an estimated minimum revenue to the center of $135,000 per year and an additional $6 million to the state and city economy.

HAROLD J. JENNIFER, JR., Executive Director of the Civic Center is shown here with the plaque awarded him and his staff by the Civic Center commission for the increase in revenue this year.

"Volunteers will be taking calls during the normal hours of 6-12 p.m. to talk it anyone who needs a friendly, objective ear to share a problem with."

Hotline is presently handling over 1,000 calls each month on a variety of topics, including such things as: boy/girl problems, family hassels, drugs, social difficulties, general depression, suicide and just talking to people who are lonely and need someone to share their thoughts with.

Hopkins drug abuse project

A student group at the Johns Hopkins University has received preliminary funding from the federal government for a $40,000 model project to combat drug abuse around the campus.

The Committee on Drug Education is working with $4,000 from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, finishing a proposal submitted in April for a community center in the area.

According to Doug Reid, a Hopkins junior who is chairman of CODE, the program will provide local teenagers with counseling on drug problems as well as recreational facilities and a 24-hour "hot-line."
