Politics, scholarships carry own lesson

By VAL HYMES

The latest flap over politics and patronage in the State scholarship program carries its own lesson.

The issue, in spite of its current colorful aspects, now boils down to whether Maryland's elected officials or a board of bureaucrats should decide if Susie Q or Sammy R. should receive a scholarship for college.

But there are some interesting side issues long due for public and legislative airing. The problems of getting the banks to make long-term, low interest student loans is one. The need for post-high school vocational and technical training for a majority of the urban graduate is another. The high cost of college is still another.

The lesson to be learned is basic. Although most senators and delegates bend over backwards to avoid giving relatives, supporters or associates a scholarship, there have been a few apparent abuses leading to a fairly general public assumption that unless you're with the "Ins," you're out of the picture.

What is more surprising are the continued shock reactions from the voters that politicians practice the art, science and witchcraft of politics.

Or that the informed voter, parent or precinct worker worth his salt also learns in a hurry how to play a similar game in order to survive in this wheel-within-deal, erector set bureaucracy we live with.

• • •

The anger and the hollering come, understandably, from those who don't want to, or don't know how, to play the political game. In fact, most voters probably didn't know the program existed until recently.

Only 5,000 applications for scholarships made the deadline this year, in spite of the fact that 80,000 information packets were sent out, and to every high school senior, by William Anthony, director of the State Scholarship Board. There are now about 8,000 scholarships in effect—about 2,000 awarded annually.

In some cases, the financial questionnaires may have defeated some parents at the outset; in others, overworked guidance counselors didn't get the word across, and in still others, the awards automatically went to those first in line, top in marks, or well known to the senator or delegate involved.

But most legislators spent long weekend hours interviewing and investigating students and their "definite financial need," as is required in the case of senators and not delegates. Some senators used numbers instead of names and still ended up with patronage. One turned the whole job over to the local school board.

• • •

The legislators representing Baltimore City can dole out about $730,000 over a four year term. This breaks down to $14,500 per senator per year, against each delegate's $200—a total of 2.5 million in political hands.

Then there are the General State Scholarships, granted by the five-member Scholarship Board, which, based on the number of delegates representing each county, means another $80,000 for Baltimore City each year, and $250,000 statewide.

The Maryland Council for Higher Education, expressing concern about the problem in the senatorial program at a recent Legislative Council committee meeting, wants to put the whole ball of wax under a Student Financial Assistance Board.

• • •

It will never happen, says Governor Mandel, who personally likes the idea, but recognizes the Legislature's stubbornness about keeping the program close to the people through the elected official.

Several alternatives, including a study of those alternatives, were before the committee, but sentiment ran high, especially with the senators, against "hiding the program behind another layer of bureaucracy."

"Shifting the program from the political arena to the career bureaucrat is not taking the program out of politics," said Majority Leader Sen. George E. Snyder. "The same pressure will be on us to apply pressure to the bureaucrat."

New, more specific guidelines seem inevitable. But even more obvious in this donnybrook is the message that parents of college-age children better get an education in politics, or at the least in scholarship seeking.

Learning more about Maryland's scholarship program, and the Legislature, might mean a better report card for the State after the next election too.

A bill proposed by a Baltimore City senator would allow scholarship funds to be used for vocational-technical and apprentice-type programs. Another would provide for graduate fellowships for disadvantaged students.

The Real Senatorial Scholarship Scandal

The AFRO continues this week with another expose of the real scandal behind th Senatorial Scholarships, pointing up the glaring, disparaging lower grants to predominately black colleges, in comparison to those to predominately white and private colleges.

The tables below speak for themselves. Black colleges got just $8.100 in scholarship funds, while white colleges got $126,800 and private colleges received $104,500.

Adults Say You're Never Too Old To Learn; Come To College This Fall

Stimulating Evening Classes, Competent Instructors, Courses To Meet Every Interest

MATURE ADULTS who are employed find a variety of evening courses from which to pick. Those interested in construction, electronic or mechanical drafting have 15 classes from which they can choose the most suitable for their needs.

By Dr. Sidney Kobre
Director, News Bureau
Community College of Baltimore

The other day I had an informal conversation about adult students with Dean Herman E. Westerberg. The conversation went something like this:

"You've been working with adult students for some years, Dean Westerberg; what is your impression of them?"

"I think housewives and employed men and women make good students," he replied. "They are mature, strongly-motivated and really want to learn something when they get to the classroom."

"What about the statement I hear, 'We are too old to learn?'"

This is a myth. Psychologists tell us that we are never too old to learn. Learning is indeed a life-long process. Whether you are in your 20's, 30's, 40's, 50's, or 60's, and even 70's, you never stop learning. In the college courses, adults continue to learn, but under systematic, planned instruction. Youth shouldn't stop your formal education when you finish high school."

Many adults come to the evening classes of the Community College of Baltimore Liberty Campus or they attend the off-campus centers in high schools and libraries in all neighborhoods because they wan; and need business or professional courses to advance themselves on their jobs. Other employed persons find that they don't want to remain in a groove — they desire broadening educational courses. They want to learn more about history, economics, sociology, literature or music or science.

You can join these never-too-old-to-learn adults by enrolling in the fall courses of CCB. You may pre-register and get personal counseling through August 24. General registration will be held September 2 through September 9, with instruction beginning September 13.

For a catalogue of classes and times given, call 462-5800, Ext. 325 or drop a card today to the Division of Continuing Education, Community College of Baltimore, 2901 Liberty Heights Avenue (21215).

200 Different Courses—Pick Those to Suit Your Special Needs

Community College officials have designed a wide variety of course offerings for evening students, and they can choose from more than 200 background and career courses.

You may select from the art sequence: drawing, painting, commercial art, or you may take fundamentals of design and art in culture, a general appreciation course. If you want to learn more about music, you may enroll in introduction to music, music theory or music appreciation.

Want to improve your communication skills, then consider the various writing courses at CCB. Like to enjoy literature? You can pick from American, English or Afro-American literature to study.

Because of the demand, a large number of business courses are offered, from secretarial work, management, marketing, public relations and retailing to data processing, real estate and labor ma-

He has solved it, life's wonderful problem
The deepest, the strangest, the last.
And into the school of angels
With the answer forever has passed.
How strange he should sleep so profoundly,
So young, so unworn by the strife,
While beside him brimful of hope's nectar
Untouched stood the goblet of life.
God knew all about — how noble,
How gentle he was and how brave.
How bright his possible future;
Yet put him to sleep in his grave.
God knew all about those who love him,
How bitter the trial must be
And right through it all God is loving
And knows so much better than we.

A Mother's Farewell To Her Children
When I must leave you for a little while,
Please do not grieve and shed wild tears
And hug your sorrow to you through the years.
But, shut out brave with a gallant smile.
And for my sake and in my name,
Live on and do all things the same.
Feed not your loneliness on empty days
But fill each waking hour in useful ways.
Reach out your hand in comfort and in cheer
And I in turn will comfort you and hold you near.
And never, never be afraid to die.
For I am waiting for you in the sky.
