New Bentalou Rec Center dedication set for Oct. 27

A. L. Cottrill, superintendent of the Baltimore City Bureau of Recreation, has announced that the new Bentalou Recreation Center will be dedicated on Oct. 27 at 7 p.m.

The Bentalou Recreation Center, an addition to the Bentalou Elementary School in Baltimore, is the work of Newlson-Salsbury, Inc., architects and Jack Daft and Assoelates, Inc., land planners andlanticscape architects. To serve the recreational needs of a large inner-city neighborhood, it has been designed to provide an artistic focal point for the community and costs $280,000.

• • •

The one-story brick structure at Saratoga and Bentalou Sts. is part of a city-wide program to expand recreational facilities at city schools built prior to the time when creational centers were incouded in school construction programs. These new centers are being built under the direction of Douglas Tawney, director of the Department of Recreation and Parks.

The 7,000 sq. ft. Bentalou Center includes a large multi-purpose room, game room, kitchen, meeting room, arts and crafts room with adjoining work room, office space, large storage areas and rest rooms. The multi-purpose room and adjoining game room are separated by a moveable partition so that the two rooms can be used together to form one large area.

Colors used in the interior spaces are what the architect describes as "fun" colors. Very brilliant yellows, blues and greens add interest to the exposed block interior walls. The cheerful interior is flooded with natural light from high sloping window.

The focal point of the center's outdoor courtyard is a "fluidic" fountain designed by Baltimore artists Richard and Roberta Hyman.

Operating on a unique alternating water pressure principle, the fountain is a wall sculpture with a series of projecting squares and triangles that contain water spouts.

A combination of water pressure and air flow turn the spouts on and off at varying intervals setting up ever-changing water patterns.

The courtyard, designed by Jack Daft and Associated, acts as a link between the existing school and the new recreation building.

Exterior material of the building is a medium red-brown brick. To create an open quality in the structure and at the same time reduce maintenance, the [illegible] damage-resisting glazing for the fenestration and have placed all windows areas which slope back from the exteior walls above the seven foot level.

Architect, Joseph B. Nelson, thinks of the center as "not done as a straight-forward building, but as an entity, a structure that uplift the neighborhood."

Morgan, other colleges in on space research

Ten participants from six area colleges participated in the first NASA — Morgan Research Program directed by Morgan State College's Dr. John W. King, professor of biology.

Three of the ten participants were members of the Morgan faculty, while the other six represented Howard University, Delaware State College, the University of Maryland, Eastern Shore, Bowie State College and Federal City College.

The enrollees joined the staff at Goddard Space Flight Center to investigate problems considered pertinent to the program of the National Aeronautics and Space Agency.

They devoted full-time to research supervised by the Goddard staff in the areas of mathematics, personnel administration, computer science, physics, chemistry, management systems and mechanical, electric and electronic engineering.

• • •

Dr. King, who has been on the Morgan biology faculty since 1946, directed the program and conducted weekly seminars, as well as discussed the participants' research as it related to the Goddard research program and current problems facing the college or university teacher.

Participating in the program were: Dr. Gladys Bradley, Mrs. Patricia E. Low and Charles P. Robinson of Morgan State College; Mrs Valerie N. Bush, Delaware State College; Johnny Gills, Jr. and Joe L. Padgett, Howard University; Dr. Adnam M. Haider of the University of Maryland, Eastern Shore; Mark J. Rockman of Bowie State College; and Dr. Isadora Posey and Ronald Schwarz of Federal City College.

Inmates entertained by Vandals

Baltimore's own Vandals have visited the Maryland Penitentiary to perform for the inmates.

More than 700 inmates were reportedly assembled in the auditorium of the Penitentiary, located at Forrest and Eager Sts., to enjoy the two hour period of entertainment on Oct. 9.

The Vandals sang their hit songs, "In Me Oninion" and "I'm Going to Wait for You," along with many other popular hit tunes.

A certificate of "Honorary Ex-convict" was awarded to Miss Mildred E. Johnson, manager for the group, by Mr. Charles Jeter, an inmate.

The Vandals recently lost one of their members, Damon Harris, to Motown favorites, the Temptations.

However, LaMont Thomas has proven to be an excellent replacement with a natural tenor voice.

Other members of the group include: Donald Tillman, Charles Timmons and John Q. Simms.

Personalities featured at Catonsville College

Mrs. Pauline Brooks, Harvey Hill, Chester France, the Rev. Jentry McDonald, the Rev. John W. Holland, Santa Jones, and other leaders of the black community will be featured this week in programs scheduled by Catonsville Community College.

Part of a two-week exploration of "elements of the black experience," planned and developed by black students of the college, the upcoming programs will deal with business, religion and athletics.

Music, drama, and politics have already been highlighted by earlier performers and speakers; including Representative Clarence Mitchell.

Scheduled for 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Oct. 20, a panel discussion of blacks in business will feature Mrs. Brooks, of Pauline Brooks Fashions of Mondawmin; Mr. Hill, clothier from Columbia; Mr. France, of LeMans Men's Fashions; and Albert Kereman Jr., assistant proiessor of business administration and marketing for the community college.

Miss Shyrone Ridley, a student in the college retailing program, will serve as moderator: To be held in the lounge of the Learning Resource Center, on the campus at 800 S. Rolling Road, the program is open to the public and there is no charge.

• • •

On Oct. 26, also at 7:30 p.m. and in the Learning Resource Center lounge, the program will consider aspects of blacks in religion and will consist of a panel including the Rev. Mr. McDonald, pastor of Morningside Baptist Church; the Rev. Mr. Holland, pastor of Full Gospel Tabernacle; and Mr. Jones, local civic leader, who will discuss the Buddhist religion.

Moderating will be Dr. William P. Kemodel, assistant professor of philosophy for the college. A performance of gospel choir music will close the program.

Throughout the period, an exhibition of black art and literature has been featured, including a group of primitive African sculptures; head pieces and jewelry from the private collection of James E. Lewis, chairman of the art department of Morgan State College.

The exhibit, housed again in the Learning Resources Center, may be viewed from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Monday through Thursday, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, and from 2-6 p.m. Sunday, through Oct. 27.

AFRO editor among eight cited by Haiti University

SPECIAL TO AFRO

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Moses J. Newson, executive editor of the AFRO—AMERICAN Newspapers, was one of eight recipients of Honorary Doctorate (honoris causa) from the National University of Haiti at a ceremony last Monday at the Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Syracuse University.

Moses J. Newson

The honor was conferred upon Newson in recognition of his outstanding contribution to American journalism and to the integrity of the black ethnic press in the United States.

The AFRO—American has printed numerous articles on Haiti with perspectives differing from that generally found in the mass media.

• • •

The degree-granting ceremonies were organized by the Panamerican Association on the occasion of the visit of H.E.M. Rene Chalmers, ambassador of Haiti to the United States, to Syracuse.

During his stay in the area, the ambassador addressed student and faculty groups at Onondaga Community College, and the Cooperative College Center of the State University of New York. He also met wih Mayor Lee Alexander of Syracuse, and with County Executive John Mulroy.

• • •

On Oct. 8, James O. Plinton, vice president for marketing, Eastern Airlines was the recipient of an honorary doctorale, presented at the Syracuse University Club.

Others honored by the National University of Haiti Monday at Syracuse University were, in addition to Newson, John Johnson, president, Johnson Publishing Co. (represented by Hoyt Fuller, editor of Black World), Syracuse alumni Conrad J. Lynn, Esq., attorney, and Bille Pickard-Pritchard, professor of fine arts, Rutgers University;

Neal Hofiman, regional director, New York state Division of Human Rights; Elwodd Bery, chairman of the board of P.E.A.C.E., a Syracuse CAP Agency; and (posthumously) Dr. Frank C. Laubach, an international literacy missionary(represented by his son, Dr. Robert Laubach).

Ambassador Chalmers had been scheduled to remain in Syracuse through Oct. 11 to personally confer the degrees on the honorees. Urgent matters of State made his return to Washington, D.C. essential on Oct. 10, and the presentations were made in his behalf by Dr. Robert S. Pritchard, founder-president of the Pan-American Association, an Inter-American Cultural Exchange Foundation brought into being in part by private Haitian initiative, and as well in his capacity as founder of a Haitian based foundation whose charter was granted by decree of the late President Francois Duvalier of Haiti, the Fondation Pro Arte et Litteris.

In confirming the honors recommended by a Selection Committee of the Panamerican Association, Dr. Pritchard stressed the importance of acknowledging leadership and eminence in the black world on the basis of independent black criteria.
