YMCA is in need of help

Roy Bradley, spokesfan for the Baltimore Area YMCA, says the general financial condition of the organization is "down to the bottom."

The subject came up during a conversation about the present United Fund campaign.

The YMCA depends almost entirely on the Fund for support of its non-revenue producing programs and last year, these programs were under-supported because of the failure of the 1970 United Fund campaign to reach its needed goal.

In the year, as in fact of the 91 other agencies of the fund, the $1.5 million difference between the money needed and the money provided meant a severe "belt-tightening" and the cutback of many programs, essential to the community-at-large.

In spite of the lower allocations from the Fund in provided service to over 50,000 1970, the area "Ys", people in Central Maryland last year, (a significant increase over previous years).

Fortunately for the organization, much of the increase in usage occurred in the "Break-even" services, those for whilh the user is charged a fee equal to the actual cost of the service.

What will happen if, once again the general public fails to answer the call of this and other agencies, for help?

In answer to this question, Mr. Bradley pointed to several area "Ys" that are already on the brink of bankruptcy and asked "what do you think will happen to these centers."

He then pointed out that they are already planning to merge two centers in order to keep one cooperating within reach of some of the people needing the services designel to serve men, women, boys and girls of all walks of life; physically, mentally and spiritually.

Mr. Bradley conlluded, saying, "We have cut programs, closed real estate, and reduced our staff. We have no other choice, if our budget is cut again this year, more of the centers will have to close. We're down to the bottom."
