Former Bear Fuqua crashes way to notice

PITTSBURGH — Move over, Leroy Kelly and Willie Lanier and Mark Washington and Raymond Chester. Make room for John Fuqua.

Kelly, Lanier et al have made an indelible impression on the pro football people, and have combined to give Morgan State College a new image as producer of gridiron talent.

Fuqua, who played with all these aforementioned stars except Kelly, is in his third year as a running back with the Steelers. And recognition is only now coming his way.

Last year John was the only runner in the NFL to top 200 yards in a game. In fact he was the first since Gale Sayers of the Bears two years earlier. Sayers' effort had been for 205 vs Green Bay. Fuqua aided by TD runs of 72 and 85 yards in the first half, got the number up to 218 against Philadelphia which was a Steeler all-time record.

This incidental intelligence was more or less buried by the headlines wrapping up the regular season that afternoon.

For one thing both the Steelers and the Eagles had been out of it for awhile. Secondly, the Eagles won the game, and lastly a free-for-all finished matters with a half-minute to do.

• • •

Last week, he carried 30 times against Cleveland equalling John Henry Johnson's club mark in the game in which the Steelers reversed an earlier decision and moved into a first-place tie with the Browns in the AFC's Central Division.

John Fuqua time for attention

He totaled 131 yards, and it was the third best effort this year in the AFC.

It was also the third time Fuqua had gone over the 100-yard mark in 1971 and in this respect he stands alone among AFC rushers.

It is an effort made all the more impressive by the fact that he got a bruised knee doing it in the first game vs. the Bears (17 and 114) which sidelined him for a game. The second one came two weeks ago against Houston (16 to 113).

• • •

Fuqua is a runner who is neither too big nor too little (5-11, 200). He is not the fastest or the slowest. He is neither fragile no rock-ribbed.

In other words he's just a highly-skilled workman who has a tendency to merge into the scenery.

100,000 seat domed stadium, artificial turf

John Charles Armor, defeated candidate for City Council, has called for exploration of a proposed 100,000-seat, domed, with artificial turf, to be built over the B and O yards near the Inner Harbor project.

"Loss of the Colts would be a serious blow to the city, and to residents throughout the metropolitan area. Proposed solutions so far have been stop-gap ones. A new, downtown stadium would help the general development of the entire downtown, and the metropolitan area."

• • •

"A domed stadium, connected to rapid transit and to the Metroliner," says Armor, "would increase Colt attendance, Oriole attendance, and might also hold Bullet and Clipper playoffs, other major events and performances, and make Baltimore once again a major convention center.

"It could be a tremendous asset, but to be feasible it would have to combine all functions.

"Loss of the Colts could be a death blow to this idea, before it is seriously explored.

"Seven million dollars in improvements to the present stadium is a nice gesture, but it's a lot like repairing a ten-year-old car, rather than buying a new one. If we are really serious about improvements in Baltimore, political and business leaders must think in large scale, for the long run.

"We need a new stadium, and in terms of access the best place for it would be downtown, connected to rapid transit, and using the parking spaces of Charles Center and Inner Harbor in off hours," Armor concludes.
