ued strong central government to assure it becoming a nation.

The problem is, he said, the present leaders, Mao and Chou En-Lai are very old. There seem to be no young leaders who can carry on Mao's work.

Therefore, he remarks, "There is speculation on where China will go after the leadership of Mao is gone."

upset," he replied to a request by this reporter.

A few minutes before, her attorney, Samuel Wolf, who was with her when she gave herself up at the detective bureau, told the AFRO that he had just withdrawn as her counsel. He would only state for "legal reasons."

But beyond the aura of silence from the family and above the wave of public sentiment against her in the violent demise of the prominent well-liked jurist, the AFRO was able to pick up bits of the past filled with frustrations and forever fading hopes of a future.

There is no question that the late judge was one of the most honored members of the New Jersey bar, from the days when he was a practicing attorney with offices downtown on Halsey St. He was the first black barrister to reach full-time ascension to the bench, but somewhere in a story and time, yet to be told, he met the pretty and vivacious Naomi Alston.

But through at least a decade, probably closer to 20 years, some friends who know her, said, she drifted back repeatedly to the paradox of her life, the judge who remained under the love and affection of his own family and whose respect spiralled high among the judiciary of the state.

There was one factor undisputed, the "affair" was no secret. Essex County Court attaches speak of the frequent visitations of the woman of the "Back Street," and the outbreaks which occurred that seemed to flow from embarrassment to something expected and anticipated.

The AFRO learned that there may have been such a visit early in January of this year, a month before the tragic meeting at the Downtowner Motor Inn.

Close friends and relatives of the late judge have seemingly learned to live with the situation that continually hovered over his career and the strain upon his family has been one that cannot be measured fully in the gamut of human endurance.

Yet it prevailed, and back in 1967, it exploded like the major eruption of a dormant volcano when Naomi was charged with stabbing the judge in his Essex County Court chambers.

She was 36 then, and friends say that she saw her years fleeing by, and they hinted of possible promises of a rainbow that had no end. Pretty and petite (she's around 5'2"), over the past five years a little weight was added and the glamour of better years when she was among the popular young set of the Oranges and Newark, beginning to fade as she moved into her 40's.

So faded her hopes, say her friends, that she would ever leave the "Back Street" and only the time and the trial to come may reveal what happened that reached the point of no return.

Although she was ordered by the court back in 1967, to keep away from the judge, it was indicated that the two were drawn in an unextricable and fatal bond.

The writer of fiction portrayed the final resolvement of the character in "Back Street" in the last words from the lips of the man for whom she had remained in the shadows, from his death bed — the result of an accident in which both the husband and wife succumbed.

There has been no such fictionized ending for the former Naomi Alston — only anguish and her day in court.

PRESIDENT NIXON'S trip to China is dramatic evidence of policy changes in both China and the U.S. that could influence the course of history for generations. During his stay in China Feb. 21-28 he is expected to confer with Premier Chou-En-Lai and Chairman Mao Tse-Tung. new office is to reach a level of parity in minority enrollment in the UMBC student body with the percentage of the total population of the Baltimore area.

Lawrence states that some black students come to a university with many financial, academic and interpersonal disadvantages, that can be partially overcome through efforts of his office.

He adds, the development of the office grows out of a realization that the black community is largely unaware of the University or they see the University as a resource primarily for white students.

The Office of Minority Recruitment is a part of the Office of Admissions and Registration, and the new director will retain his position as assistant director of that office, simultaneously.

Lawrence, 1961 graduate of Douglass High School, received a B.S. degree in art education from Morgan State College in 1969. After graduation, he was employed by the Baltimore City Health Department as health representative.

In November of that year, he came to UMBC and was appointed to the position of assistant director of Admissions and Registrations for High School Relations.

Some of the professional and civic organizations of which Lawrence has membership are: American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Administrative Officers, Afro Americans Education for Educational Opportunity Recruitment Task Force, Higher Education Council on Urban Affairs and the Center for Afro American Studies.

His awards include: Outstanding Achievement in Art, in 1968, from Morgan State College and a Certificate of Appreciation, in 1971, from the Vocational Division of Baltimore City public schools.

Propose to name Rec center for Marshall

The Park Board at its Feb. 23 meeting will hear of a proposal by the Urban Planning Committee, Inc. to name a recreation center in honor of the late City Councilman Robert C. Marshall.

Mrs. Lena Boone, chairman, states that the Committee feels that giving the center the City Councilman's name will honor his service, leadership and devotion to young people. The Center is located next to the Furman L. Templeton School 125 at Pennsylvania Ave. and Dolphin St.

The meeting will be held at 3 p.m. in the main office of the Bureau of Parks, at the Madison Ave. entrance of Druid Hill Park.

Congrats to the Poets!

(AN. EDITORIAL)

Dunbar High School's basketball team plays Carver today (Friday) for the second time this season. And for the second time, the Poets will be required to meet one of their toughest rivals on the later's floor.

In as much as the Dunbar youngsters will go into this game undefeated, they will be weighted down under the tremendous pressure. To win means the A Division title in the Maryland Scholastic Association race. It also means triumph over a traditional foe.

But the accomplishment of either, or both of these objectivs, carries much more. Conquering opposing teams in the same class is satisfying, oy course, but a far greater achievement appears to have been overlooked.

Winning today will represent for Dunbar and basketball coach Sugar Cain victory over a kind of adversity that has been never before imposed upon a scholastic program.

Dunbar is at the crossroads of a punishment which many considered grossly unfair when it was administered last Spring. She is completing a season in which she has been compelled to play all of her basketball games "on the road."

In the more than two decades this reporter has been on the scene, no high school team in any sport has been deprived the opportunity to play at least one game at home.

Even more so than among the pros and collegians, high school athletes are at a cisadvantage when playing on enemy soil. The very nature of young fans tends toward ostracizing and making uncomfortable, the visiting team.

In Dunbar's case, the extreme is even greater. Because of the home-enviroment disorders, which led to the Poet's punishment, MSA schools have severly limited basketball attendence. Most schools restrict their crowd levels to the point that the gallery is 90 percent local.

Additionally, basketball is played in much closer contact with the spectators than any other major sport contact with the spectators than any other major sport. It adds to the handicap a visiting team has to overcome.

That Dunbar has done this in game after game is testimony to the inspiration of her coach and the dedication of her athletes. . . SAM LACY.

Police hunt for youths in Calvert Hi robbery

Western district police are looking for a group of teenagers who are alleged to have entered the Calverton High School last weekend and smashed coca-cola machines, splashed ink and paint in several offices and damaged telephones.

Police reports claim a witness stated he saw the unidentified teenagers leave the west entrance door between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. Feb. 12.

They entered a small foreign car and drove away, the witness said.

Police suspect the teens who did some substantial damage to telephones entered the three-story school block through an unlocked ground floor window.

The intruders did damage to property on each floor.

A school official said they have not been able to assess the cost of damage but "it is nothing great."

congressman, especially when it means taking the divisive step of pitting party machinery against an incumbent with a good record.

The Democratic Party apparently is backing all the white incumbents though at least one has voted with the Nixon Administration more than with the Democerats.

The feeling is fueling the drive to make such forays into the community so costly the political bosses and moneymen will think twice about such actions in the future.

Gov. Mandel could be hurt politically if Judge Howard defeats Richard Gilbert, his recent appointee to the Special Court of Appeals, and would suffer a double blow if the second black candidate beats out Marshall Levin in the Supreme Bench race.

The kind of race shaping up also could help defeat Mandel's bid to strip from voters any say in the selecting of judges, which would leave him free to pick former law associates and close friends while others with more impressive records are overlooked.

Judge Russell, now first vice president of the Baltimore Bar Association, in all likelihood, would have become its first black president had not he requested his name be taken out of possible contention because of his decision to run for elective office.

A brilliant lawyer with experience as a judge, many in the community had hoped until Thursday night that Judge Russell would have made a run for the Special Court of Appeals seat, thus preventing the type of divisive contest now developing in the community.

In his brief remarks on Thursday night, Judge Russell alluded to the issue of community unity.

He said:

"My friends, we have a job to do . . . for our city, for our country, for each other.

"And because you believe as I do that the times cry for healing, not dividing . . . solving, not shouting . . . building, not busting . . . loving, not hating . . . we will travel that road together as brothers — brothers of a spirit that will give all people their dignity, their rights, and their reward — and together we will earn the right to represent all the people of the 7th Congressional District."

Thus far, Congressman Mitchell is assured of the support of two of the city's black state senators, Clarence Blount of the Fifth District, and Clarence Mitchell III, of the Fourth.

Key members of Sen. Verda F. Welcome's Fourth District Organization are backing Congressman Mitchell, although the senator has not taken a stand, and Sen. Robert Dalton, Second District, is thought to be leaning toward Russell.

The New Democratic Coalition in the Second District has come out for Mitchell.

Judge Gilbert files for Appeals Court

Judge Richard P. Gilbert filed Tuesday in Annapolis for election to the Court of Special Appeals of Maryland. Judge Gilbert was appointed an Associate Judge of that Bench in April of 1971 and under Maryland law must run for election this year to retain his position.
