The Provident Comprehensive Neighborhood Health Center at 907 Edmondson Ave., opened in 1971 providing comprehensive, family-centered medical care services for citizens of the West Baltimore area.

Equally important to the opening was the involvement and employment of persons from this enighborhood.

The community, through its Health Council has input into organization policy planning, operation and provision of services.

President of the Council is Mrs. Ella Strohner, a community resident, and well-known for her efforts in Health Care for the underprivileged not only in Baltimore but throughout the nation. She is a 1971 AFRO Honor Roll recipient.

Dr. Harvey Webb Jr., the Center's Director in an interview regarding the Center's "team system" stated, "Our goals are not merely restatement of those previous years, but more they become an extension.

"After four years exploration, I feel confident of the center's ability to deliver medical care to an entire community through the mechanism of the community health team.

"Although all the problems of health team organization have not been resolved, we have identified the fundamental issues and we are confident of the viability of our design.

"We have made progress and now we are looking and examining the process of our development to enable us to plan even more carefully in the future."

Dr. Webb continued by stating "While we were developing the community health team, we also developed the capability of training health teams, both from trained health professionals and from people with no previous training. We further developed the capability to train the administrative and technical support personnel necessary for the proper functioning of community health care teams: in addition, to train members of the community in skills necessary to provide for their own health care needs."

• • •

As the Provident Comprehensive Neighborhood Health Center now expands, its range of care it has found that high quality comprehensive, family-orientated medical care as traditionally defined is not enough.

The Cented is now looking at the health related issues of the environment of our community, at issue of day care, housing, health education.

With negotiations underway for a new center, the staff is now focusing on a way of making health and environmental services more sensitive to the needs of the community.

• • •

With this in mind, they will work to develop a "Health Service Institute" as an integral part of their services function, that will train health care teams with the full range of administrative, technical and environmental workers needed to support them not only for their area but other areas where they have currently no such capability.

• • •

The PCNHC is a cooperative effort of community, federal, state and city governments, the Provident Hospital, and the people "who care" as part of "caring" that make the Center "go."

If you need care in terms of physical, mental, family planning, food service, prenatal, alcoholic, dental, well-baby, eye-care, nose and throat plus many more, visit the center at 907 Edmondson Ave., or call 523-6900 to take advantage of the out-reach services, "happily" provided by Provident, the community health center that has as its motto: 'Health care and caring are our only professions."
