Duane's wife and mom mum on his whereabouts

DALLAS (UPI) —A lot of persons in a decaying South Dallas neighborhood near the State Fair Grounds know where Duane Thomas is—even if the Dallas Cowboys don't.

The controversial running back, who walked out of training camp in California last week the same night he arrived, spends his time in a white frame duplex with yellow trim almost under the rim of the famed Cotton Bowl.

On the porch of the home, shared by Thomas, his wife and mother-in-law, lives a small monkey in a wire cage. It serves as amusement for the mysterious star's two children.

"He's been living here for three months," his mother-in-law, Mrs. Carrie Malone, explains. "But he stays gone for five, six hours at a time. He's hard to catch."

Thomas' wife fields inquiries about his whereabouts.

"Anything I say would have no relevancy to Duane," she says to visitors at the front door. "You'll have to ask him why he did what he did. I can't speak for him."

To the children in the area, Thomas is a neighborhood figure.

"He just turned up," a youth said. "But, yeah, a lot of people know he's here."

If the Dallas Cowboys management knows where Thomas is, they are not admitting it, nor are they seeking out the West Texas State product. Thomas and the Cowboys are playing a waiting game and Duane is apparently in no hurry to move.

Court order prohibits Hayes' talks with ABA

HOUSTON — A federal judge has barred high-scoring center Elvin Hayes from negotiating or signing with other teams pending a July 27 hearing on a suit filed by the Baltimore Bullets.

The Bullets won an injunction Tuesday from U.S. District Judge Allen B. Hannay blocking Hayes from any moves to another team. The Bullets acquired Hayes last month from the Houston Rockets and asked Hannay to uphold his old $1 million contract and stifle his demands for a raise.

Hannay granted the injunction and set the hearing after the Bullets posted a $50,000 bond.

Hayes, 10th in National contract in 1969 with the San Diego Rockets, a franchise moved to Houston last year. Hayes said the pact was based on "fraud and undue influence."

The Bullets are said to fear the "Big E" is contemplating a jump to the rival American Basketball Association.

Hyes, 10th in Nantional Basketball Association scoring last season with an average 25.2 points per game, is asking for an unknown salary increase. His contract is for $1.07 million for 10 years with annual bonuses up to $15,000 depending on the team's record.

The Bullets said they cannot replace Hayes because of his "unique and extraordinary skill."

The Rockets received forward Jack Marin and a future draft choice in exchange for Hayes.

500 youths brave heat for Jesse Owens Games

More than 800 Maryland youngsters vied in plus-90-degree heat for honors in the 6th annual Jesse Owens track and field meet at Northwestern High School.

Champions were crowned by Owens and Ed Bell, the latter representing the Atlantic Richfield Refining Co., which co-sponsors the event.

NL to start 6, AL three in Tuesday 'Star' tilt

Nine black players will be in the starting lineups for the opposing teams in Tuesday's Major League All-Star Game at Atlanta.

This number falls two short of the previous high, established last year in Detroit, when the starting pitchers were Pittsburgh's Dock Ellis for the National League and Oakland's Vida Blue for the Americans.

Incidentally, some kind of history went unnoticed in 1971. The entire pitching chore for the losing (6-4) NL side was handled by Ellis, San Francisco's Juan Marichal, Chicago's Ferguson Jenkins and Houston's Don Wilson.

Of the nine starters, six are in the National League lineup, and three are on the American side.

Marked by a 10-man lineup, the NL roster, again this year, is heavily black.

Starters will be Hank Aaron of the Braves, and Roberto Clemente and Willie Stargell of the Pirates.

Following in order in the voting were the Cubs' Billy Williams, Willie Mays, Frank Robinson, Cesar Cedeno, Lou Brock, Al Oliver and Bobby Tolan.

The Astros' Lee May will open at first base and the Cincinnati Reds Joe Morgan will start at second.

First base was another heavy tally for black athletes. May emerged first in a five-way battle with the Reds Tony Perez, the Giants Willie McCovey, the Padres Nate Colbert and the Cardinals Matty Alou.

Three blacks were voted onto the starting unit for the AL.

The Chicago White Sox will send Dick Allen as the starting first baseman. Rod Carew of the Minnesota Twins, will open at second, and Reggie Jackson of the Oakland Athletics will start in the outfield.

The nearest to the top spots in the AL balloting were at shortstop and in the oufield.

Oakland's Campy Campaneris was second to Boston's May of the White Sox, and Amos Otis of the Kansas City Royals, were fifth and sixth, respectively, among outfield vote-getters. . . . LACY.

Wilson Cup entry list shaping up

BALTIMORE — Applications for entry in the 4th annual Wilson Cup Golf tournament, have begun arriving at the headquarters at 2402 Springdale Ave., officials report.

The tourney, which will benefit the Baltimore YMCA camping program, is scheduled for the Park and Pine Ridge courses, Aug. 12-13. Men will play 36 holes at medal, and women 18 holes on the second day.

The event will be broken into flights — four flights for men entries and three for women contestants. Appropriate trophies will be presented at the conclusion of Sunday's play.

Applicants for entry should mail checks or money orders to "Wilson Cup" before the Aug. 1 deadline, covering $20 for two days' green fees for men and $12 for women.

The affair is under cosponsorship of the Carroll Park Golf Association and King Landing Camp.

The State of Things

By VAL HYMES

By VAL HYMES

MIAMI BEACH — Members of the Maryland delegation to the Democratic national convention will never say, "If you've seen one convention, you've seen them all, because they're still not sure what they saw.

Of course, there are those who will argue that they liked what they saw and knew all along what was happening. And even their delegation chairman, Governor Marvin Mandel, said, "They knew exactly what they were doing all the time."

But that point is debatable, and showed up perhaps best in the comparison of the Maryland and Virginia delegations during those four long days and particularly in the contrast in the role of a delegation chairman.

In Virginia's bank of seats, Chairman Joseph Fitzpatrick was a human dynamo, moving, conferring, prodding and cajoling — nursing a machine that took into account not only fits harmonious components, but also those gears that didn't quite mesh with the ideology. There was disagreement, but it was face to face and was reflected in the votes.

• • •

Across the huge hall, members of the Maryland delegation sat looking at the back of their chairman's head, wondering what was going on inside of it.

Even at the caucuses (there were only two, and one was cancelled before the platform session because "there's nothing to talk about") Mandel was his most inscrutable.

After the delegation voted during one caucus to have the chairman announce in a roll call Maryland's support of the lettuce boycott, Mandel ignored it.

Vice Chairman Grace Orlansky finally made the announcement, but many of the delgates felt it didn't have the same impact.

Mandel said later those caucuses were "very informal" and therefore such votes were "out or order."

At least two of the delegates said afterward they were pleased that Governor Mandel had not pressured them or told them how to vote. The McGovern delegates, who caucused regularly on their own, obviously were pleased that Mandel was not interfering with the national McGovern strategy.

• • •

But many of the uncommitted delegates seemed to feel that briefings, at the very last, were in order, either from the delegation chairman or the State party chairman, Sen. William S. James (Harford).

Mandel said he didn't want to "tell" the delegates how to vote, and neither did he tell them how he voted — even afterwards. There was still some confusion three days later about his position on the California challenge.

He told me he had changed his plan to vote with Senator McGovern and voted no instead, but his reasons changed drastically from the time he gave it on the floor to the following day, when his press aide tried to explain it.

• • •

The latter explanation said Mandel changed his position because McGovern didn't need Maryland anyway and he had "internal problems" with the delegation.

That story raised a few eyebrows among the delegates, who seldom saw him huddle with them.

The California challenge, remember, was the most critical vote of the convention, keening the McGovern bandwagon rolling when it might have hit an insurmountable roadblock.

The platform votes were also critical, because the Republicans are already gearing up for next month in Miami to take that platform apart splinter by splinter.

So, regardless of the intricate reasoning behind Mandel's crucial votes, the fact remains that the Maryland delegation needed the guidance of a chairman — the kind of leadership that Mandel can exercise with both hands tied behind his back — but none was forthcoming.

• • •

Instead of furthering himself as a Maryland leader, which he already is, Mandel strengthened his national image.

He once again served well as a mediator, was called to visit McGovern several times during the convention, and even appeared on the list of vice-presidential possibilities.

But he had no time to discuss the controversial charter issue — so some of the delegates called their own informal caucus. That will tear the party in half in 1974, because it would wrest from the party regulars the last vestiges of control, they may retain through the national committee.

But it may not have been victory by default either. The "new convention." — or open convention — apparently called for an absolute hands-off policy by the "old pols," as the party bosses were dubbed. So the old flavor was replaced by a new enthusiasm, and the Maryland delegation seemed to enjoy its freedom.

But on the complicated procedural votes, it almost looked as if the old pols were relishing their hands-off posture. It was like planned chaos, designed to expose any weaknesses in the armor of the New Order and to give them something to point to if President Nixon should win in November.

There are those who say you can't teach old pols new tricks, but it is hard to believe Marvin Mandel is incapable of mastering the art of participatory politics. It is easier to believe that Maryland's governor is covering all his flanks against the Nixon slaughter or the McGovern sweep.

In either case, he will have earned himself, remarkably, the right to say, "I told you so."

Ali vs. Patterson fight date moved

NEW YORK (UPI) — The 12-round heavyweight fight between former world champions Muhammad Ali and Floyd Patterson has been rescheduled to Wed., Sept. 20, promoters at Madison Square Garden announced.

The bout, which was originally scheduled for Aug. 28, was moved back because a fight planned by Ali, which was to have taken place in South Africa, was cancelled.

Ali who beat Alvin "Blue" Lewis in Dublin on Wednesday, now has no other fights planned before he goes against Patterson, who beat Pedro Agosto with a TKO in the also-has-no-other bouts sixth round last Friday, scheduled.
