Variety of courses at CCB this fall

By Dr. SIDNEY KOBRE

Applications are being accepted now in the Day Division of the Community College of Baltimore for the fall term, which begins on September 5.

"Community College keeps its registration time open until the last minute for those who have not made up their minds which educational institutions they want to attend," President Harry Bard said. "But the time to register is now, as they will get the benefit of more leisurely counseling and the arrangement of a suitable educational program for themselves."

More than 3,500 full-and part-time students are expected to enroll for the fall semester at the college.

Students will study for the Associate in Arts degree, usually requiring two years of study, or a certificate, awarded after one year's study.

"At CCB, some will pursue the liberal arts, or general education program, which will enable them to enter the third year of a four-year college or university.

"Others enter a business or professional career upon graduating from CCB."

At CCB, the programs are geared to the educational interests and occupational needs of city residents. They have taken advantage of the low-cost but high quality education at CCB.

About 1,700 freshmen are expected this year.

A number of new students are choosing the business area, selecting business administration, secretarial science or data-processing. Others are choosing the engineering courses — construction, electronics and mechanical engineering.

Some students will enroll in the new course in plant engineering, or in fire protection technology. Because of the demand for hotel and restaurant managers, an increase of students in this program is expected.

A growing department at the college is Allied Health. Students in this program enroll for nursing, occupational therapy assistant, physical or respiratory therapy. The dental profession is looking for CCB graduates who become dental hygienists, dental assistants and dental laboratory workers.

There are also art, music and writing courses. Hundreds of new students for this fall have already enrolled in the social science courses to obtain a general education and to prepare for careers in social work, government, psychology or teaching. Physical and biological sciences are also offered at CCB.

In addition, instructors teach courses in English, reading, science, mathematics, assisting students bridge the gap between high school and college. These courses have proven highly successful, with students going on to obtain good grades and succeed in the regular college programs.

Persons who wish to enroll for the fall semester, full-or part-time, should obtain their high school records and have them available.

For brochures and a catalogue of courses and programs, students should write, Director of Admissions, 2901 Liberty Heights Avenue (21215) or call 462-5800, Ext. 328.
