Mental Health Care Centers Models Of Racism

Nader reportsays blacks get raw deal in District

By BLAINE TAYLOR

Consumer-protection advocate Ralph Nader's Center for the Study of Responsive Law has issued a 100,000-word report charging that the National Institute of Mental Health's community mental health centers are "in serious trouble," especially in Washington, D.C.

The document states:

"Although the District of Columbia has been proclaimed a 'national model' of just about every federal program that addresses itself to a social challenge — a model in crime prevention, drug abuse treatment, alcoholic rehabilitation, mental health care — the harsh conditions under which the poor continue to exist point to a reality that is . . . a model of racism, exploitation, and the arrogance of power."

• • •

In addition, the Nader publication asserts that there are still two classes of mental health care — in the District and around the country — one for the poor, and another for the rich, which operate on "subtle (and not-so-subtle) race and class distinctions."

Congress is currently considering extending authorization of the Community Mental Health Centers Act, originally passed in 1963 and due to run out on June 30, 1973.

The Act seeks to reverse the trend toward increasingly-large state mental hospitals, and to replace this system with smaller community-based facilities.

They are designed to treat local residents on the spot, as well as screen patients who really didn't require actual hospitalization but some form of lesser, more appropriate treatment.

• • •

According to the paper, written over a two-year period by two young members of "Nader's Raiders," a host of national mental health organizations, testifying in support of renewal of the program before Congress, has told the lawmakers that there's nothing wrong with it that more federal funds can't cure.

Not so, says, Nader's people, as the funds are poorly-administered.

The NIMH, set up to oversee the program, is not interested in either knowing about deficiencies or in correcting them where they are known to exist.

At least a major part of the problem, is bureaucracy — black as well as white.

As the black population in Washington has increased, there has grown up a large black middle class, with its share of professionals and professional bureaucrats.

"Blacks now dominate the Department of Human Resources, but there is little evidence that they are any less directed than their white predecessors in a bureaucratic empire building or any more committed to the provision of human services."

• • •

In Washington, D.C., the Directorate for Mental Health, following federal guidelines, divided the city into four areas of service, with each area having its own community mental health center.

The four Area centers are at the following locations:

Area "A" — 3246 G St., NW.

Area "B" — Spring Rd., in N.W. Washington.

Area "C" — at D.C. General Hospital

Area "D" — on the grounds of St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

Area "A" is the newest of the group, "the only center in the city with a predominantly white area.

Located in Washington's fashionable Georgetown section, this fledgling center is likely to have access to richer resources than the others.

To date, it has received no federal funds. . ."

• • •

Franklin D. Chu, a co-author of the Nader document, told the AFRO that he gave "High marks to Area 'D' only in so far as its better than the others."

In addition, Chu criticizes former Department of Human Resources head Philip J. Rutledge for transferring Area "B" money ($100,000) to "wealthy Montgomery county . . . to help pay for a mental health facility there."

Mental health care for the District is "close to catastrophic."

Those who suffer from this are the poor, who, "— without a voice, are hidden in the back wards of St. Elizabeth's Hospital and in the 'back wards' of the ghettoes in the nation's capital."

• • •

Another problem, emphasizes the study, is politics in the mental health set-up.

W. . . Washington, D.C. provides a superb example of mental health as pure politics. And it is a political arena in which NIMH is unlikely to wage battle for the poor and disadvantaged."

Nader's document denies that the community mental health centers have reached "their stated goals," as the NIMH is giving them credit for having already achieved.

For example, NIMH has told Congress that the centers are responsible for the decline in number of residents at state mental hospitals. The report contradicts this.

". . . this decline started in 1956, a full decade before the first NIMH-funded centers started operation . . . Between 1966 and 1971, the number of state-supported mental hospitals increased from 307 to 321; the total number of patients seen annually in these hospitals rose from 800,216 to 836,326; and the maintenance figures . . . soared from $1.3 billion to over $2 billion."

• • •

The NIMH shifts patients as well as figures, from hospitals (such as St. Elizabeth's) to inadequate foster care homes.

Quoted in a letter of one official visitor's feelings, after having visited one of these homes:

"I couldn't sleep last night . . . The list of deficiencies is long . . . There was the stench. There was the man who could only remember his name yet had bottles of Stelazine (a tranquilizer) and Dilantin (for epilepsy) in his own keeping . . . This is no outpatient care. It is no

Ambassador eulogized by dignitaries, diplomats

By LILLIAN WIGGINS

U.S.A. ambassador Samuel Z. Westerfield was Eulogized Tuesday morning at Metropolitan AME Church as a person who not only loved his family, and country but his fellow man also.

Bishop Henry W. Murph of the Second Episcopal District told the family and friends gather in the church that ambassador Westerfield was a man of the world.

"He left a great heritage," the bishop said. To the family he continued, "Be humble as Sam Westerfield was; be beautiful, efficient and proficient and God will reward you in the end. I know not what the end will be."

Speaking about the ambassador's love for his family, deeds and the giving of himself, Bishop Murph said, "I can't believe that a Creator would forget such love and let it wind up in a blind alley of illnesses.

• • •

The rather large structured church, sitting in the middle of the block in down-town Washington between 14th and 16th Sts., was a bit warm and one could detect a cool breeze on passing the huge fans that stood upright in the back corners of the church.

The greenish colored bronze looking casket was sitting in the middle of the church amid a mass of floral arrangements. Draped on the casket was the American flag.

A huge mural of Jesus Christ, centered behind the altar, seemed to have outstretched arms taking the casket of the late Ambassador, in its shadow.

The church was nearly crowded with diplomats, dignitaries, State Department officials, friends, colleagues and family shortly before 10 a.m. About then the black family car carrying the Ambassador's widow, their two children and other members of the family drove up in front of the church.

The family car was followed by approximately 20 others. Ben Whitehead of the Protocol Office, Department of State and Rudolph Aggrey, head of the West African Division of the State Department, were there to receive the family and other dignitaries.

Arriving at the church earlier were Vernon Jordon, head of the Urban League, Dr. and Mrs. James Cheek, he's president of Howard University; Dr. Cleveland Dennard, president of Washington Technical Institute, Mrs. William Rogers, Judge Robert Campbell, Sterling Tucker, vice chairman of City Council; and Col. J. Thomas Martin, Judge Harry T. Alexander, former Ambassador Ben Hill Bruce, whom Mr. Westerfield succeeded; Dr. and Mrs. Andrew Brimmer, New York physician.

Sitting across the front of the altar were the participants. Mayor Walter E. Washington; Bishop Frank Reid, 14th Episcopal District (Liberia); Sen. Edward Brooke of Massachusetts; David Newsom, assistant secretary of state for African affairs; the Reverends Robert Pruett, S. E. Guiles; and S. L.

• • •

Outside, waiting to come in, was a grim but stately Mrs. Westerfield. She was accompanied by her son Samuel Westerfield III, a third year medical student at Columbia University.

Young Sam who stepped into his father's life moment he arrived from New York.

Sheila, a third year student at American University studying modern languages, accompanied her mother to Monrovia.

Mrs. Westerfield walked steadily down the center aisle and throughout the service was well composed. However, following the service, Mrs. Westerfield walked from the church

She proceeded immediately to the family car.

• • •

The active pallbearers, Sidney Hall, Walter Johnson, Wayne McNeill, Michael Mims, Melvin Murphy and Garland Pinkston Jr., were all friends of Sam Westerfield, III.

"Honorary pallbearers were the Epsilon Beta of Sigma Pi Phi Fraternity; the executive board of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History and Omega Tau Fraternity.

Mayor Washington, in giving expressions of sympathy from citizens of the Nations Capital, stressed that Ambassador Westerfield worked with the tools at hand to help build a better world. "He firmly believed in democracy and fought to make this a better world for all men, regardless of race, creed or color."

Recalling his visit with the Ambassador in Liberia, a year ago, the mayor said that he noted the love and affection the leaders and people of the country had for Mr. Westerfield.

• • •

He was more than just a beautiful American at a foreign post, the mayor said solemly, "he gave the words brotherhood a deeper meaning. He was a world citizen and he saw ways to assist and he saw ways to help countries in Africa.

"In his commitment and . . . yes in his great dedication . . . he sought to help all human beings. He was a serious man and yet a man of great sensitivity.

"We must remember the many students he inspired. We can take comfort in knowing he made a difference in the lives he touched

• • •

Sen. Brooke said he was numbers as a senator but as a friend. But as a senator, he said, "I have great admiration and respect for his contributions not only to black Africa but to the world."

• • •

Sen. Brooke said not only was the late ambassador blessed with a great mind but with a great heart. "He loved Helene deeply . . . he loved his children and his mother and sister Anna and his step-sister also.

"He loved his God and all of his life he was committed to excellence. I ask almigat God to do unto Sam as he has done unto us. He was a good man," concluded Sen. Brooke in a voice that sounded nearly broken.

Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, David Newsom, referred to Mr. Westerfield as a fine diplomatic and a friend.

With a grim face Newsom said, Ambassador Westerfield was unique. He expertise and his vision bridged oceans as they bridged specialities." He stated that the late ambassador was as much at home int he cities of Africa as he was in Baltimore or Boston.

• • •

"He was as adept at solving the mysteries of the balance of payment as he was at explaining the intricacieso f African politics." Newson stressed that Ambassador Westerfield was as well known and respected in the Departments of Commerce and Treasury as he was at State.

"His career, all too brief, was climaxed by his astute guardianship of that unique relationship between the U.S. and Liberia.

"I want, also, to say a world about Sam Westerfield, a friend. When I came to the Bureau of African Affairs, ten years ago, new to black Africa, it was Sam who gave me a sense of the vitality of that region.

Mt. Zion Methodist has summer program

Mt. Zion Methodist Recreation Center, Liberty Heights and Wabash Ave. is having their first summer recreation program. The program opened on June 26 and will continue until August 26, ages are 7 to 17 years and there is an enrollment of 127 students.

This is a non-funded program which has professional teachers and volunteers.

Courses that are offered are modern dance, dramatics, body building, tutoring, reading, writing, arithmetic, music, arts and crafts and basket weaving.

Recently the center presented a talent show for the parents and children. The theme for the affair was "Everybody's Birthday."

Participating in the show were the students and some of the teachers. Among the acts performed was a scene from the play "Purlie." a court room scene and the modern dance group did three dances. At the end there was a Birthday party for everyone with a large cake and punch."

Among those participating, were Misses Linda Johnson, April Crawley, Pamela Powell, Belinda Kane, Tywanna Henderson, La Tanya Johnson, Deborah Lockley, Lisa Sullivan, JoVonne Day, Jackie Conlon, Linda Gibson June Baker, La Tosca Henderson, Karen Jones.

Messrs. Kevin Henderson, Allen Terry, Tully T. Sullivan, Lyn Smith, Terrell Caber, Hal Henderson, Billy Kane, Dee Macani, Tommy Henderson Jerold Baker, Bobby Lockley, Joseph Carruthers, Joy Harris. The Rev. Hal T. Henderson is pastor.

Baptist convention at City Temple

The 46th annual session of the Sunday School and Baptist Training Union Convention of Maryland was held recently at City Temple Baptist Church, Eutaw and Dolphin St.

Dr. Tom Skinner, president of Skinner Evangelistic Crusades in New York was one of the guest speakers. He stated that "Outside of our churches (home) that we have a sign. It says worship 11 a.m. Sunday morning.

"However, we have a church clerk who gives the announcements.

"After the announcements are given, we have four or five people giving the same announcements. This is not worshiping God.

"If we are not going to worship at 11 a.m. take the sign down and put up something else."

Other participating on the Thursday night program were The Voices of Friendship, Dr. Montague J. Brackett who extended greetings, and the Rev. Vernon Dobson who introduced the guest speaker.

Installation of new officers were Attorney A. B. Koger, president emeritus; Charles E. Coger, president; The Rev. John Wright, first vice president; Mesdames Jacqueline Brooks, second vice president; Maggie Dorsey, third vice president; Karina Odessa Coates, Corresponding secretary; Clarence J.
