State of Maryland keeps vital records in one place

Maryland is moving toward "one-stop" service in providing citizens with copies of vital records.

"Our objective is to combine Baltimore City and State record keeping into one coordinated operation where previously there had been duplication and confusion," said Secretary of Health and Mental Hygiene Dr. Neil Solomon.

Until now, these records for residents in the 23 counties and the City of Baltimore have been separate, and citizens frequently encountered inconvenience in obtaining the vitally necessary information.

* * *

In 1974 all records will be consolidated on microfilm when the entire Department of Health and Mental Hygiene moves into its offices in the newly constructed building in the State Office complex on W. Preston St.

Physical merger of records will begin on January 1, 1973.

New records for Baltimore City residents registered between July 1 and December 31, 1972, will still be housed in the Municipal Office Building.

After January 1, 1973, all new certificates will be registered and stored at the Preston Street Office.

A $2.00 fee will be charged for each certified copy of a birth, death or fetal death record.

Why one of the most demanding chefs in the business uses Open Pit Barbecue Sauce.

Robert Shurn is his own man. After seventeen years as a professional chef in leading Chicago restaurants, he knows what he likes. And he likes the outdoor flavor of Open Pit Barbecue Sauce.

"I've tried other barbecue sauces, but this is about the best you can use." And use it he does. About four gallons a week—on pork, chicken, beef and on his special rib tips.

Mr. Shurn sums it up this way: "People ask me what I put on these ribs. I tell them barbecue sauce. And they say, it's not just any barbecue sauce. And I say, no it's not. It's Open Pit."

Open Pit. The name itself says outdoor flavor.
