Morgan's new center has urban thrust in mind

Among new programs developed with the idea of an urban thrust in mind is Morgan State College's Center for Continuing Education, which could be considered one of the most innovative in higher education today and is headed by Dean Beryl E. Williams.

The center goes far beyond the traditional idea of education in a classroom pursued by a student who is from 18 through 25 years old, concentrating in one field, with education terminated after completion of college or graduate and professional school.

The center, says Dean Williams, is directed to those persons whose precollege experiences have not all led them to make adequate progress. Our purpose is to prepare him and give him support. Many have had the adequate ability to do this, but they need that support."

The center is particularly interested in student involvement in the community and operating independently of the classroom through laboratory and actual work experiences in the field, she added.

There is no age limit on students enrolling in the center.

Those persons who would be especially attracted to its work would include:

Recent and earlier high school graduates, evening students from adult evening centers (high school equivalence diplomas); veterans; women or men returning to college; community workers, teachers' aides, parent liaisons; transfer students from community colleges and other institutions; those employed during the day or at midnight; special students not pursuing a degree and overseas students and personnel.

Also, persons with special institutional or health situations; professionals continuing their education; minority group, the handicapped; maintenance men and service workers and those from rural areas and active service men expecting to re-enter civilian life.

With its new center Morgan is seeking to offer admission to college to those students, adults and younger people, who because of financial, family and other personal circumstances would never have the chance to attend an institution of higher learning or complete requirements for a degree.

Too often the traditional university and college in America has provided no meaningful educational opportunities for these groups.

Now they too are being given a chance.

Through various programs of the Center for Continuing Education as: The Evening School; the Language Arts Program for entering freshmen in cooperation with the Upward Bound Bridge Program for high school graduates; Outreach Programs as Upward Mobility College in Social Security Administration centers at Woodlawn and downtown locations and non-credit programs on several educational levels.

Also pre-and post-session short-term projects and seminars; the summer session; training for teachers and working adults; University Without Walls and University Year in Action and the Upward Mobility College's Students on Campus Program, enrolled students are provided with unlimited opportunities.

They are given with on-the-job instruction by faculty from the center in specific areas through agreement with private industry, business, public schools and government.

At the same time they receive full credit for courses taken which can be used toward a degree.
