Glass liners are hazardous

Thermos bottles with broken glass could be hazardous to children, so the manufacturers have voluntarily agreed to improve the safety of vacuum bottles with special emphasis on containers intended for use by children.

• • •

Representatives of the vacuum bottle industry have agreed that vacuum bottles under 16 ounces intended for use by children (indicated by labeling, cartoons, pictures, etc.) will be required to pass a drop test to make sure that broken glass cannot pose a hazard to the young user.

The test will consit of dropping afilled vacuum bottle four times from a height of three feet on an impact medium of specified hardness.

The industry has also agreed to add label warnings to vacuum bottles not specifically for child use to warn of the possible hazard from glass liners, and to print warning statements on replacement fillers for the bottles.

Manufacturer's representatives said the new voluntary program will become effective April 1, 1973.

Come to the new City Fair

Sit tight: it won't be long now.

Keep your eyes, ears, and the weekend of Sept. 29, 30, and Oct. 1 wide open: the 1972 Baltimore City Fair is about to unfold.

You'll know something's in the air if you find yourself downtown on Friday morning.

From approximately 10:30 'til noon the streets of Baltimore will vibrate with the resonant drums, spirited marchers, and trumpet flares galore of the City Fair Parade.

And if you let it lead you, you'll soon be down at the Harbor watching Mayor Schaefer cut the ribbon which will officially open the now traditional city event.

Next, you'll hear a deafening boom and see a man fly out of a cannon over the water.

The Great Zacchini will be announing to those who may have forgotten that the Fair has returned once more.

The neighborhood tents, sporting their displays, their wares; the institutional exhibits; local artists with their works; amusements; food; entertainment; and a harbor alive with a wide panorama of waterborne events.

Wind your way north, via a looming network of towers, to The Charles Center, where the festivities begin anew.

A wine and Italian food garden overlooking Hopkins Plaza; in that plaza, a "Live-In" center demonstrating decorating and facelifting techniques for city dwellings.

In Center Plaza there'll be children's entertainment, more institutional displays, and big-name nightly performances.

Adjacent to this will be a "Sportsarama" featuring mini-clinics with professional athletes and many more sports offerings.

$1.8 million contract for water meters

The Board of Estimates recently awarded a $1.8 million contract for 50,000 new remote-reading water meters to Neptune Meter Company, Saddle Brook, New Jersey.

The awarding of the contract officially launches the city's program to convert all remaining unmetered water services, said Mayor

Approximately 50,000 installations are involved, mostly homes.

Funds for the purchase of the meters and their installation were provided by a $7.8 million metered water loan approved by the voters last November.

The purpose of the conversion program is to equalize the basis of water charges for all customers.

There's more to the islands than sunshine.

Let's say you're getting tired of basking on sun-splattered beaches. Or you're a little bored with floating your days away in sapphire waters.

It's not time to end your vacation.

It's time to get off the beaches and get into the life of the islands.

Get into people like St. Thomian artist Ernestine Bertrand, whose paintings reflect the color and vitality of her beautiful Caribbean world.

Get into Haitian art, like the sculpture held by Mrs. Bertrand. It's one of the many ways in which African heritage has been preserved throughout the islands.

Get into foods like fungi and kallaloo. Handprinted fabrics, handcrafted jewelry.

Get into the island culture. And maybe even take a little bit of it home with you. That's more than you can do with the sun.

It's easy to discover the island culture on an American Airlines Endless Summer vacation. You'll get great service while you're flying. And the lowest priced vacations available on the ground.

No matter what the state of your economy is, American gives you the most for your money. Call your Travel Agent or American Airlines.
