NAACP wants historic Mt. Moriah preserved

Samuel Gilmer, president of the Anne Arundel County Branch of the NAACP, has sent the following letter to that County's Executive, Joseph W. Alton:

"In joining the "Preserve Mt. Moriah Committee" I became aware of Black History and events right at home.

"My mind wandered back to the sixties when the black youths were demanding Black History.

"Author Alex Haley ("Tracing the Landing of Slaves in Annapolis") and his forefathers and the NAACP Training Department released its helected listing of Negro "firsts" that proved indeed, that living became more enjoyable because of Negro Inventors and discoveries.

"I witnessed the Saving of Carvel Hall and other important landmarks in Annapolis and the County, but each represents the White-Anglo Saxons.

"I will not attempt to convince you of the Victorian Gothic Ecclesiastical Architecture of Mt. Moriah AME Church because that has been mentioned in many presentations to you and letters to the editor.

"We will try to train your thoughts logically.

"1. Franklin Street is part of Annapolis' Historic District.

"2. Mt. Moriah AME Church is within the Historic District and blends with Reynolll's Tavern, St. Anne's and the Court House.

"3. Mt. Moriah AME Church is a historical landmark representing the Negro's quest for religious freedom, the same as the White Anglo-Saxons that fled to this country.

"4. Within the Historic District there should be a mixure of relics of various racial and religious reverence that caused this nation to be known as the land of the free.

"While the sale of Mt. Moriah Church to the County was negotiated because it was felt that a skeover by the County was eminent, we were appaield of your recent press releases and ask that you reconsider any thoughts of demolishing Mt. Morish AME Church.

• • •

"Keeping within the spirit of the NAACP's 62nd Convention at Minneapolis, Minn., July 5-9, 1971 Resolution G. Bi-Centenial Celebration and the President's desire to spread the celebration around the various states, we the Anne Arundel County Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) support the preservation of Mt Moriah AME Church and the establishing of a Museum of Afro-American History within the Church."

Copies of the letter were sent to: Rogers C. B. Morton, Secretary of he Interior, Sen. T. McC. Mathias Jr., and Sen. J. Glenn Beall Jr.

The "Resolution G" of which Mr. Gilmer wrote, is the following:

"The announcement that a Commission has been formed to plan the Celebration of the 200th Anniversary of the founding of the United ance to 23 million black Americans whose contributions to the growth and development of our great nation must be called o the attention of all who are involved in this historic occasion.

"Therefore, be it resolved that the National Office in- and inclusion in the bicentesnial and that the National Office establish a committee composed of its education department and historians throughout the country to ascertain this documentation and participaion."

STATUE AND ARTIST—Statue of Black Soldier honoring service of black troops in the wars of the United States stands at corner of Calvert St., between Lexington and Fayette Sts.

Inset: Artist who sculpted statue, James E. Lewis, with Mayor Schaefer on day of unveiling, June 14. (AFRO photo by I. Henry Pillips).

Morgan sculptor Lewis honored for his work

James E. Lewis, chairman of the Art Department at Morgan State College and creator of the Black Soldier Memorial Statue, now standing in Monument Square in downtown Baltimore, had been lauuded by both the U.S. Department of the Army and the First United States Army for superior patriotic service.

In a formal military ceremony recently presided over by Morgan State President King V. Cheek, outgoing chairman of the military science department, Col. Clarence M. Hurtt, and his successor, Lt. Col. John H. Branch Jr., Lewis was presented the Department of the Army's highest civilian award, the Certificate of Appreciation for Patriotic Service and an emblem symbolizing the military's aporeciation.

Col. Hurtt, in reading the certificate, told Lewis, "You have rendered exceptionally patriotic civilian service through your sculpture of the magnificent bronze statue, The Black Soldier which was unveiled and presented to the city on June 12.

The 13-foot statue commemorates the participation of the black soldier in the variofs wars and conflicts throughout the country's history.

Lewis was lauded for his "great sensitivity and professional compeience and is a splendid tribute to the black soldiers who have so gallantly served their country."

Col. Hurtt, in concluding the ceremony, said, "Lewis' efforts have contributed immeasurably to the improvement of relations between the military and civilian community and have greatly enhanced the military image and prestige in our nation."

• • •

Since that ceremony, Lewis has received a Certificate of Achievement from the First United States Army which expresses appreciation for his "contribution in the furtherance of proper recognition due the American Black Soldier in the defense of his country on the occasion of the unveiling of the First U.S. Army Black Soldier Monument in Baltimore.

$50 million OK'd for kids

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger of the United States Supreme Court has denied the federal government a stay pending appeal to the Supreme Court in a case involving the constitutionality of a Social Security Act provision regarding the eligibility of illegitimate children for Social Security benefits from deceased parent.

In a suit brought by Leagl Aid Bureau attorneys, a federal three-judge court in Baltimore ruled Aug. 16 that illegitimate children must be granted survivors insurance benefits in the same general manner as legitimate children.

• • •

Previously, the Social Security Act had denied illegitimate children benefits when legitimate children had used up the maximum amount to which a deceased wage earner's dependents were entitled.

The court also ordered that all illegitimate children who had in the past been wrongly denied there benefits be paid retroactively.

Solleitor General Erwin N. Griswold argued before the Supreme Court that the district court order would require the payment of approximately $50 million in retroactive benefits.

Because of the immensity of this amount, he requested, on the United States' behalf, that the order be suspended until the Supreme Court can rule on the merits of the case.

This request, which was opposed by Legal Aid Bureau lawyers representing Barbara Ann Griffin of Baltimore in her quest for benefits, was denied by the Chief Justice, sitting in his capacity as Circuit Justice for the Fourth Circuit, which includes the State of Maryland.

This decision makes the Chief Justice's action final and means that the Social Security Administration must immediately begin dispensing the $50 million in survivors insurance benefits to all illegitimate children across the country who have applied for benefits and been denied them based upon the unconstitutional provision of the Social Security Act.
