U.S. Department of Labor Has Fall Job Openings

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. Department of Labor is involved in "people programs" — programs designed to help individual Americans better their status in the world of work. Its Congressional mandate — dating back almost 60 years — is to further the interests of working men and women and those unemployed Americans who want to work.

For the young man or woman embarking on a career or the experienced worker seeking a new challenge, the Department offers a range of employment opportunities.

WORKING LIFE

The Department, with headquarters in Washington, D.C., and field offices in many cities across the country, seeks to enhance the quality of working life in America by:

Administering job training and placement programs;

Requiring equal opportunity in federally involved contract work;

Assuring safe and healthful working conditions;

Enforcing laws regarding the minimum wage and overtime pay, wage garnishment, age discrimination in employment, equal pay without regard to sex;

Collecting, analyzing and reporting economic data; and

Protecting veterans' reemployment rights

JOB OPENINGS

The Department plans to fill a limited number of professional level positions this fall in Washington, D.C., and in fields offices in various cities throughout the country.

Some job openings will occur at the beginning professional level (college graduates or three years' related work experience for economists, statisticians, social science research analysts, and computer analysts and programmers in the field of labor statistics.

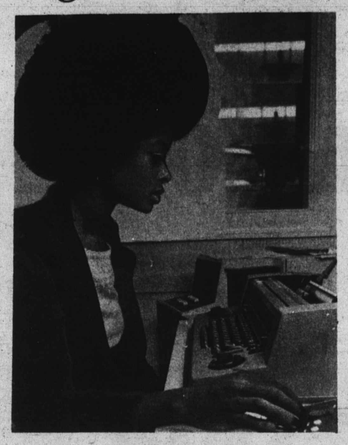
Using their different backgrounds, persons in these positions are involved in gathering, analyzing and reporting on data on employment, the labor force, prices, wages, productivity, labor relations and safety and health.

A few positions also will be filled in the fields of labor standards research and administration and the analysis of manpower progrms.

JOB TITLES

These jobs will have the titles of contract compliance assistant (enforcing EEO requirements);

Wage Hour Investigators and analysts (administering minimum wage, equal pay, age discrimination, and other wage and pay provisions) workmen's compensation claims examiner, unemployment insurance program specialist, and manpower analyst.



AT LIBERTY MUTUAL'S home office in Boston, 15 high school students from the Edco Space Program are acquiring career training. Like Carol "Cookie" Brown, left, who is learning to operate an IBM Magnetic Tape Selectric Composer, and Darlene Harris who is practicing the skills of a photo lab technician, students will be able to find meaningful employment when they complete school.
