Mandel names DeVito education study head

Gov. Mandel has named Mathias J. DeVito chairman of the Commission to study Education, a task force which will examine the entire structure of the state's education system, from kindergarten through college.

The governor related that Mr. DeVito wasn't his first choice and that he'd had trouble getting someone to take the job due to the amount of time it required.

According to one source "He was seeking someone with a national reputation on education, like Clark Kerr."

The members of the commission are as yet unnamed, but are expected to be designated by the end of this month.

The Community Strategy Council for Higher Education recommended last January in a letter to the governor that he appoint blacks to make up one-third of the group.

Further, the CSCHE supplied the chief executive with 36 prominent names in the black community, to which the governor replied in a letter of Jan. 10:

"I cannot guarantee that there will be any racial quota or that the members will come from your list."

The governor first announced his intention to form such a study group last year in his State-of-the State address.
