Kunstler talks at Morgan on Bill of Rights

William L. Kunstler, the noted civil liberties attorney will present the 18th Annual Bill of Rights Day address at an all-college Convocation in the Murphy Fine Arts Center Auditorium, Morgan State College, Wed., Dec., 13, 11 a.m.

Mr. Kunstler, 50, is considered one of the foremost defenders of civil rights workers and controversial figures.

He has argued scores of cases for such clients as Martin Luther King, Jr., Stokely Carmichael, Adam Clayton Powell, Malcolm X and the Black Panthers. And is known in Maryland chiefly for his role as counsel in the H. Rap Brown trial.

The purpose is to allow citizens and students to ponder the meaning of the Bill of Rights and the basic freedoms it safeguards.

BROTHERHOOD OF ST. Russell, Dr. Harold Ramsey, director of the brotherhood and the Rev. Donald O. Wilson, rector. (Photos by John Murphy, III)

Mr. Russell says that education is the key

City Solicitor George Russell received a standing ovation as he spoke at the Brotherhood of St. Andrew Breakfast at St. James Episcopal Church Sunday.

He stated that even though we are prisoners of fear, who are affraid to go on the streets at night and lock ourselves behind barred windows and doors America is the best place in the world for black citizens to live.

He stated further that black and white citizens live in an inescapable mutuality and even though blacks have to be 5 times better in order to compete, education is still the key. He urged all the youngsters present to stay in school and get as much education as possible.

Mr. Russell said, "We live in a society that has no standards of moral accountability" and he wonders how we as a nation developed National heroes, such as Agnew, Wallace and Nixon.

He concluded by saying no matter who you are, you were nobody until you had helped some one else.

New professorships announced at U. Md.

Dr. John H. Moxley, III, dean of the University of Maryland School of Medicine has announced the appointment of 10 associate professors, two visiting professors and 29 assistant professors.

Dr. William W. Quiver, Sr., a specialist in pediatric cardiology, has been appointed associate professor of pediatrics. He is a former associate professor Meharry Medical College and Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

Dr. Tyson Tildon, who is associate professor and director of pediatric research at the university, has also been named associate professor of the biological chemistry department.

Included among those appointed as assistant professors were: Dr. Ernest A. Austin, surgery; Mrs. Norma Jones, psychiatric social work and Dr. Thomas C. Jones, Opthalmology.

Dr. Charles B. Payne was appointed assistant professor of medicine.

Caucus seeking seat on Armed Service unit

The chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus has tried as a "travesty of justice" the fact that an all-white inquiry has been held into racial problems in the Navy.

Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, chairman of the 13-member organization, said the caucus would seek the seating of a black member on the House Armed Services Committee in January.

An Armed Services subcommittee has probed recent racial incidents in the Navy. Stokes said committee chairman F. Edward Hebert, D-La., said a black House member could sit in on the sessions on an informal basis but could not monitor executive sessions.

• • •

However, Stokes said, all of the sessions were executive, or closed. Stokes said he also pointed out to Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., that blacks would not be represented on the hearing panel.

"I said this would be a travesty of justice," Stokes said.

RESIGNS—Father William B. Lowry Jr. told his St. Katherine Episcopal Church congregation Sunday that he will resign effective December 31.

Mail deadline set by Post Office

WASHINGTON (UPI) — If your packages aren't mailed by Sunday, they might not arrive in time for Christmas, the postal service said Tuesday. And if you want your Christmas cards delivered by Dec. 25 they should be mailed within 10 days, it said.

The postal service said that it has activated a Christmas communications network designed to keep the projected volume of nine billion pieces of holiday mail flowing between the postal service's headquarters and five regional offices regardless of rain, sleet, snow "and other factors."

The network, in its ninth year of operation, was set up to watch for bad weather spots where mail might have to be diverted as well as areas where transportation and delivery emergencies might develop.

The service issued these other recommended mailing deadlines: Dec. 11 — Airmail greetings and parcels to armed forces in Europe and international air parcels to Europe, South and Central America.

Dec. 14 — International air parcels to Canada and Mexico.

Dec. 16 — International air greetings to Europe, Central and South America.

Dec. 19 — International air greetings to Canada and Mexico.

Dec. 20 — Air greetings to Alaska and Hawaii only.

Dec. 21 — Air greetings within the contiguous 48 states.

Dec. 16.

Originally scheduled for Dec. 2, the parade date was changed because the University of Maryland, Eastern Shore, a co-sponsor of the parade, has been invited to play Florida A and M University in the Orange Blossom Classic.

Ryland homes selling fast in Randallstown

Brisk home buying by Baltimoreans during September and October has accounted for the sale of 45 Ryland homes in the beautifully wooded Randallstown community of Briarhurst.

According to Nathaniel Katz, sales manager for the Ryland Group's Baltimore division, the response in Briarhurst is due to exceptional home values, attractive architecture and heavily wooded lots.

Featuring exteriors of either aluminum siding or cladwood, luxurious shag wall-to-wall carpeting and solid oak raised panel kitchen cabinets, Ryland has nearly 20 home styles available in Briarhurst including the popular two-story "Raleigh", split-foyer "Sebring" and split level "Barcelona". They are priced between $28,900 and the low $40,000's.

Briarhurst is located on Tiverton Road, off Liberty Road about four and a half miles north of beltway exit No. 18. It is within walking distance of Deer Park Elementary School and is convenient to numerous shopping and recreational facilities.

In addition to Briarhurst, Ryland homes are being built in three other Baltimore County communities and over 20 communities and "new towns" in Maryland, Virginia, Georgia and Texas.

You can die from rabbit fever

With the rabbit hunting season under way, the City Health Department warns hunters and housewives of the danger of contracting tularemia or "rabbit fever."

"Tularemia is an infectious disease often spread through infected rabbits and squirrels. It is transferred by direct contact with the animal usually during skinning or preparing for eating.

In addition to chills and fever generally occurring within one to ten days, tularemia may produce a sore at the site of contact, swelling of the lymph glands, headache and general weakness. Severe eye inflammation can occur if the eyes are wiped symptoms occurs within a few days of a hunting trip of after ohandling wild rabbits or squirrels.

Untreated tularemia may result in death.

ACCIDENT SCENE — This is the way it was 11 a.m. Tuesday after two cars collided, Paca and Druid Hill. At left, Miles Eugene Goodwyn, 39, Tubman Ct., is carried from the wreckage of his 1968 Chevrolet station wagon by an ambulance crew from Maryland General Hospital. Police report the car jumped the curb and crashed into the Bausch and Lomb building, right panel. Mr. Goodwyn is charged with failure to obey an automatic signal. Trial is Jan. 3, 1973. Center panel shows his passenger, Mrs. Matilda Lewis, 58. Second car in right panel, a 1966 Oldsmobile sedan was operated by Irving Rogers, 78, Slade Ave., who was slightly injured. Mr. Goodwyn and Mrs. Lewis were treated at Md. General and released. (AFRO staff photos by L Henry Phillips Sr.)

The State of Things

By VAL HYMES

Girding for battle

When the county officials first got together in the 1950's, it was a sort of clubby, casual group with a hayseed image.

That hayseed had a lot of clout back home but little in Annapolis, virtually none in Washington.

Today you wouldn't know the Maryland Association of Counties.

The same men and women are there, but after this winter meeting on the Eastern Shore it's obvious that there is nary a sign of hay or seed anywhere. It's a tough group of politicians now, and it's ready to get tough in Annapolis and Washington.

The elected officials of Maryland's counties and Baltimore City made it clear at this winter conventiont hat they want no part of a supergovernment running things, but a few of them did allow as how they would accept some guidance from above.

This is the same old conflict of local governments, forced by rising costs to ask for financial aid from the State and Federal governments but unwilling to accept orders from them.

Their strongest argument is that they best understand how to voters want things done, but they were told by Senate President William S. James, fore xample, that they have allowed urban areas to run through "inadequate" local zoning controls.

And they were warned by House Speaker Thomas Hunter Lowe that they have let reapportionment deprive them of legislators in Annapolis without getting home rule adopted in any additional counties but one.

FILLING THE VACUUM

"When a vacuum exists in government," said Lowe, "other facets of government will rush in. You better do something, and do it quick!"

Judge Joseph Sherbow joined the chorus by warning the local officials that they better find ways to make their governments more efficient before his new Committee on the Function of Government does it for them. He urged local committees to go to work before the taxpayers say, "We've had enough."

Speaker Lowe surprised the conferees, nearly 250 of them, by coming out for full state funding of public schools. Lt. Gov. Blair Lee brought the official word to Easton, however, that Gov. Marvin Mandel is dead set against it, so that should be that.

In fact, Lee warned, if the counties expect to receive even the $21 million additional school aid contained in his task force recommendation, they had better sell their legislators on sustaining Mandel's veto of four 1972 bills that would cost the State $11 million. To emphasize his point, he note that Baltimore City was due to receive $5.5 million more in school aid and would save only $4 million if those vetoes were overridden.

The local officials listend to all these warnings of doom with good humor, and handed out a few of their own.

THEY'LL TAKE BOTH

For one, they served notice that they would press for the veto overrides and the additional school aid, too. They also said they would fight any State land use plan that does not give them and their planners the last word. They also intend to go after more authority in school construction, now run by the State.

And while they disagree some over the handling of the assessments crisis, there's no doubt that they'll be marching with the taxpayers when they revolt in Annapolis this winter.

That's a special bone of contention (which finally aroused Governor Mandel to call in local assessors this week) because local officials actually have no authority over them. Among the resolutions adopted was one asking for authority to raise local money through sales taxes on utilities, fuels, and rentals.

They also flexed their muscles by voting to fight any attempt by the State to tell them how to handle cable television franchises, and urged legislation to give them control over community college budgets.

The local officials say they don't mind State guidelines any more than they mind Federal guidelines. But where do guidelines end and controls begin?

And it is interesting to notice that while they arm themselves for a fight with the governor and legislature, Mandel mobilized the Democratic governors to go to Washington after those "impounded" Federal funds.

Highways and other things are involved, but the greatest blow to the state governments is in the President's refusal to release any more than $5 billion of the $1 billion antipollution funds mandated by Congress.

All agree that pollution is a direct result of not having a land use plan. So while the State and the local governments quibble over land use authority, the Federal government is casting eyes in the same direction.

Each level of elected official, therefore, is primed for battle with the level above to save the little people from supergovernment. And they're all taking aim on the same target — guaranteed to be the issue of the year — land use.

CCB board approves new master plan

By DR. SIDNEY KOBRE

The Community College of Baltimore will develop a master plan which will give orderly progress to the two-year institution during the next decade.

"The CCB plan will fit into the state plan for the Community Colleges of Maryland," President Harry Bard said.

"This project, involving 16 collegest throughout he state, is being sponsored by the Maryland State Board for Community Colleges and will give direction to the growth of CCB and avoid duplication of courses and programs in colleges."

The plan will explore the role of CCB in the community, the educational requirements, building and equipment, the financial needs of the Baltimore Community College's Liberty Camous as well as the future Harbor Campus.

Officer charged with homicide

Police Information Department told the AFRO Tuesday Patrolman Clarence Webster is charged with homicide in the death of 37 year-old longshoreman, Eugene Richardson.

Preliminary hearing has been set for Jan. 5, 1973 in the Southeastern District police station, according to police.

Police records show Mr. Richardson suffered a fatal neck injury during a police raid on a dice game he and other two persons were shooting Nov. 4.

M eantime, a brother of the victim, Leroy Richardson has appealed to the NAACP to investigate full facts surrounding his brother's death. Enolia P. McMillan president, notified the States Attorney's office Monday.

No recognition for Rhodesia

WASHINGTON — The Department of State has denied a report from Rhodesia that the U.S. might soon recognized the regime of Ian Smith.

"There is absolutely no plans to recognize Rhodesia," a spokesman for the department said, referring to the recent television remarks made in Salisbury by a former counsel to President Nixon.

Clark MacGregor, an ex-advisor to the president for congressional relations, said on Rhodesian TV that the United States might soon recognize Rhodesian sovereignty.

MacGregor, who headed the President's reelection campaign, described as "un-natural the present situation in which the break away British colony has not received international recognition as an independent republic."

In reply to the possibility of recognition, he said, "In a free society such as ours, unnatural situations which are unpopular tend to be subject to change.

Southern panel calls police witnesses

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI) — The official commission of inquiry into the killing of two Southern University students Nov. 16 heard testimony from law officers in resumed secret hearings Wednesday.

Southern administrators have to date been the only witnesses to testify before the 12-member biracial panel chaired by Louisiana Attorney General William Guste.

Sheriff Al Amiss and state police superintendent Donald Thibodeaux appeared. Students involved in the fatal confrontation with police at the 8,700-student campus were to testify later this week.

The panel has spent much of its time reviewing television news films since it began its hearings four days after the Nov. 16 incident in which students Denver A. Smith and Leonard D. Brown were killed.

• • •

It concluded last week that the students were killed by shotgun pellets and that law officers fired the first volley of tear gas which touched off the violence. Gov. Edwin Edwards has contended that students in control of the administration building hurled the first canisters of tear gas at police.

Police, who have said they were armed with the type of shotgun shells that killed the students, deny having fired anything but tear gas.

A group calling itself "Concerned Parents" picketed Wednesday's hearings because its members claim the preliminary findings have been "unfair" to law officers.

Cuban airlift seen resuming

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Cuba will allow the resumption of the airlift of refugees to the United States in the near future, State Department officials report.

Department officials said, however, the resumption did not signify closer U.S.-Cuban relations.
