Banish liberal image, Sen. Byrd urges Democrats

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., said Sunday the Democratic party must get rid of its "pro-welfare . . . pro-permissiveness . . . pro-busing image" and get back in the mainstream.

Byrd, the Senate Democratic whip—assistant leader—said President Nixon served a landslide victory over Sen. George S. McGovern because the party "left the people."

"I think that the party was not in the middle of the road," Byrd said. "It's candidate was not—and with all due respect to its candidate—I don't say this in any perjorative sense in respect to Mr. McGovern, but I do say the impression the people had was that it was way off to the left," he said in an interview on "Meet the Press."

Asked what he thought the Democratic party should do to woo back those who supported President Nixon or Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, Byrd responded:

* * *

"I think that what we have got to do is get rid of the pro-welfare, giveaway image, the pro-permissiveness image, the pro-busing image, the meat-ax cuts of defense funds and get back into the middle of the stream."

Byrd said it was too early to speculate as to whether Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., or Wallace could get the Democratic presidential nomination in 1976.

Of Wallace, Byrd said:

"Of course he represents When he said, 'send them a message in Washington,' this caught on. When he talked about the unfairness in the internal revenue taxing program, he talked about the middle income Americans.

"When he said there are some millionaires who can make millions and not pay a penny, and yet there are middle Americans who work every day and who have to pay a high percentage of their income, he struck home."

He also said that Nixon "could improve his relations with Congress and with the press and the American people."

Byrd suggested that Nixon could hold more news conferences and consult more frequently with congressional leadership and committee chairmen.
