nocence," Mr. McIntosh told the AFRO.

Mr. Brooks met his lawyer after several unsuccessful dealings with other attorneys resulted in the loss of $15,000 in legal fees, with no visible results.

"My other attorneys did nothing for me and took my money," the graying, handsome man said.

"I met Mr. McIntosh through my sisters and Mrs. Bends."

His sisters helped raise the money over the years for his many legal battles.

They are: Mrs. Mary Rogers of New York, and Mrs. Erma Dixon, 1600 block Durham St.

"When I met Mr. McIntosh I told him, 'Don't take my money unless you can do something for me.' "

McIntosh's efforts on his client's behalf included a personal meeting in Annapolis with Gov. Mandel, in which the chief executive questioned them both about the case.

"We found the governor very warm and friendly," said the lawyer.

Mr. Brooks spent "10 days less than two years" in the Pen, where he worked on a pentograph engraving machine making desk nameplates and badges.

"I was happy to learn a new skill," he commented, and from all reports he was well-liked by everyone in the prison.

"I had faith in God, prayed every night and submitted myself to Him.

"Everything fell into place and the Lord put the right words into my mouth and that of my lawyer."

During the many legal actions, Mr. Brooks spent some years out of jail waiting for the state to determine his fate.

A 29-year veteran electrical welder at the Beihlehem Steel Corporation's Sparrows Point plant, he also decided during this time to open up a carry-out sandwich shop, "The Ponderosa," 2102 Harford Rd.

"Mrs. Bends held my place for me while I was in prison.

"She always said she would hold it as long as she had strength."

Mr. Brooks, divorced, is now living at the shop, and says "I'm going to close it up for two weeks, do some work inside and then reopen for business."

He wants to return to work at the Point and run his shop at night, but is now having some difficulty getting reemployed at Bethlehem.

cause this citizen has really laid it out.

Now let's go into something new and exciting in police work.

By Feb. 1, you will actually hear more about the new team concept of policing in the Baltimore Police Department, for this is a new concept in policing designed to put the Police Department back in the community, somewhat similar to the old "foot patrolman," only I believe it has been improved over the old foot patrolman.

Sergeant Mercedes Rankin, a policewoman of whom you have heard me speak many times, has been put in charge of one of these teams.

She will be the total police officer supervising male officers and working on crime in the high crime areas. This will be a first in Baltimore—uniform and all.

Soon these teams will be out in the community contacting you good citizens for help in fighting crime in your community. If you are for real, when you say you want crime stopped, then give your Police Department the support it needs.

Legislative redistricting still stalled in committee

ANNAPOLIS — The important matter of legislative reapportionment appears headed for lengthy committee hearings as witnesses continue to present testimony before the House Committee on Constitutional and Administrative Law.

State law requires that the General Assembly adopt a plan for legislative redistricting by the 45th day after the opening of the regular 1973; otherwise, the plan set forth in a resolution sponsored by House Speaker Thomas Hunter Lowe (D., Talbot will become law on the 46th day.

Loudest opposition to the measure, to date, has come from enraged citizens and the mayor of Rockville, Md. (Montgomery county) which, would be split into two legislative districts thereby halving their effective representation.

Observers, here, expressed belief that House Joint Resolution, No. 18, a plan presented last year by the Governor, would be adopted with substantially few, if any, changes.

If adopted H.J.R. 18, would divide the state into 47 legislative districts for the election of members of the General Assembly.

Under terms of the redistricting plan, each district would elect one senator and three delegates. In addition, each district may be subdivided into three whole delegate subdistricts or one whole delegate subdistrict and one multi-member sub district.

However, in any legislative district which contains more than two counties, or parts of more than two counties, where delegates are to be elected at large by the voters of the entire district, no county, or part of a county shall have more than one delegate residing in it.

With the division of Baltimore City into 11 legislative districts, the effect of the proposed redistricting plan on city representation to the General Assembly would be to reduce the number of House delegates from the current 43 to 33 with a corresponding reduction in the number of city senators from 12 to 11.

Open enrollment questioned at school board meeting

By BLAINE TAYLOR

The meeting of the Baltimore City Board of School Commissioners last night (Thursday) at Coldstream Elementary, 1400 Exeter Hall Ave. was quiet, except for Commissioner Kalman R. Hettleman's criticism of the open enrollment policy of Dr. Roland N. Patterson, superintendent of city schools.

The policy allows any student to attend the city school of his or her choice.

Mr. Hettleman, brought to light the existence of a task force report on open enrollment, thereby not honoring a request by Commissioner Dr. W. Eugene Scott that the report be made public at the next regularly scheduled meeting of the board.

Commissioner Robert J. Thieblot chimed in, saying "Open enrollment is a disgrace because it has hurt education and has carried people miles from their homes."

Commissioner Larry Gibson countered: "The important thing to remember is the conclusion that the task force reached, namely, that it sees open enrollment as the only equitable policy for city school children."

Mr. Hettleman closed with "We did not keep faith with a public by keeping this report secret until the present time."

Commissioner Stephen W. McCherney, in replying to a question raised by another board member at a previous meeting, stated that the 18 months since Dr. Patterson became superintendent, only one additional black has been appointed to the position of principal or above rather than a higher number as alleged."

He also said "It is simply not true to say that people in acting positions are being paid more than incumbents, as was charged before, too."

Commissioner Mrs. M. Richmond Farring restated her request that principals be issued directives to empower them to hold spot checks of student lockers for dope, and Dr. Patterson said he would do so.

The following names for new schools or additions were passed by the board: No. 45, "Federal Hill Elementary;" No. 134, "Walter P. Carter Elementary;" No. 135, "Luther Craven Mitchell Elementary;" No. 36 (three wings), "Christopher Columbus," "Medgar Evers," and "Whitney Board Vice President James M. Griffin presided in the absence of President Dr. John Walton, who entered Johns Hopkins Hospital earlier in the week for surgery.

Also present was Student Commissioner Miss Arlene Jenkins.

State Department and the U.S. Consul to Haiti, Ward Christensen, were abducted Christensen, were abducted Tuesday and held at gunpoint for 18 hours before being released.

They were freed on the steps of a DC 6 airliner which flew the three captors, 12 political prisoners and $70.000 to political asylum.

The terrorists had originally demanded the release of 31 political prisoners and $500,000 ransom for the release of Knox, 64, and Christensen, 53.

The gunmen had held Knox and Christensen at gunpoint through Tuesday night. They had intercepted Knox at the gate of his private residence Tuesday night as the ambassador returned home from work in his chauffeur-driven car.

The kidnapers then got Christensen, a native of Montana who was raised in Oregon, to the house on a pretext.

William McComber, deputy undersecretary of state, flew down from Washington Tuesday night and negotiated the release with 21-year-old President-For-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier.

But French Ambassador Bernard Dorin was most instrumental in the negotiations with the kidnapers. At one point Dorin broadcast an appeal over the country's national radio personally guaranteeing their safe passage out of the country.

Mexican Ambassador Armando Amador Duran, Canadian Charge d'Affaires McKenzie Wood and Papal Nuncio Luigi Barbarito also intervened in the negotiations but neither they nor Dorin accompanied the terrorists to Mexico.

Barbarito, the Vatican envoy, said, "The kidnapers are obviously experts who knew exactly what they were doing and I am certain that their leader at least is not Haitian," he said.

Up to the last moment there was confusion on the number of kidnapers but most reports said there were three, one very dark-skinned black, another black with a lighter complexion and a woman who kept on a veil at all times.

The Mexican Government granted all of them temporary political asylum pending a detailed check of their backgrounds by authorities.

"We are all prisoners," commented one man who identified himself as Daniel Josue Bernard. Bernard said he is a former French professor who had spent three and a half years in prison.

Asked why, he said: "In Haiti nobody knows why he is imprisoned."

He added, "Life is very hard in Haiti. The people suffer."

There was no word on what happened to the ransom money the kidnapers carried aboard the air Haiti DC6 plane that brought them to Mexico. Mexican officials would not say if they impounded it.

None of the Haitians, 10 men and five women, carried any baggage and all were light summer clothing.

The only comment on the money came from Raymondo Napoleon, a mustachioed youth, who said in French: "We brought some money to live with for a while."

Foreign Secretary Emilio O. Rabasa said the refugee status of the 15 Haitians would be determined individually after a thorough study of each of their personal backgrounds.

Haiti's ambassador to Mexico, Georges Salomon, was waiting at the airport when his plane landed and he quickly demanded all the male passengers.

"The men are extremists and Communists," he said. "Some of them are common criminals. One of them robbed a gun shop."

But he would not say which one.

After their arrival all 15 were taken away in an airport bus, apparently to a hotel.

Dr. Knox, a native of New Bedford, Mass., received an A.B. degree from Williams College in 1930, an M.A. from Brown University in 1931, and after attending the University of Paris in 1938-39 received a Ph.D. degree from Harvard University in 1940.

He taught at Morgan State College from 1931-35 and again from 1939-43. Mr. Knox is a Phi Beta Kappa.

After serving in the U.S. Army in World War II, Knox entered the Department of State in 1945 and until 1954 worked primarily in the field of research on Northern and Western Europe becoming Chief of the Division of Research for Western Europe in 1955.

In 1957, he was assigned to the NATO Defense College in Paris and in 1958 was named First Secretary in the United States Mission to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and European Regional Organizations (USRO). In 1963, he served as counselor of Embassy and Deputy Chief of Mission in the American Embassy in Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

He was ambassador to Dahomey before his current assignment.

Mrs. Clementine Murphy Knox, wife of the ambassador, is granddaughter of AFRO founder, the late John H. Murphy Sr. and sister of AFRO president John H. Murphy III.

She is currently visiting relatives and friends in Baltimore, Md. Their two children, Karen and William are attending college in Pennsylvania.

withdrawn from both Laos and Cambodia and neither nation is to be used as a base for moving troops or munitions into Vietnam.

In Paris Nonla Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh arrived for Saturday's signing of the cease-fire pact and was mobbed by hundreds of Vietnamese carrying flowers and chanting "Vietnam has triumphed."

He told an airport news conference that his government and the Viet Cong would abade fully by the terms of the accord and hoped the other parties to it would do the same.

In the 60 days after the agreement takes effect, the United States is committed to withdrawal of all its remaining troops in South Vietnam and the Communists are supposed to release nearly 600 American prisoners.

A list of prisoners and some accounting of those missing in action is expected Saturday by the United States. The first prisoners will be released to American authorities in Hanoi within 15 days.
