Job Corps In Baltimore Tries For Miracles, And Gets Results

By BILL RHODEN

The Job Corps program doesn't promise miracles, but it does guarantee results!

Since its inception nine years ago in Baltimore, Job Corps has spread to the majority of states across the nation, and currently has the second highest job placement rate in the country.

A native Baltimorean and 6-year job corps veteran, Mrs. Rosetta Williams, is this city's program director.

Since being named director last year, Mrs. William's office, which is responsible for recruitment and screening of applicants, boasts an 85 per cent success ratio of placing its job corps graduates into jobs, far above the national average.

"Job Corps is a success," said Mrs. Williams, "we've placed 85 per cent of the total number of youngsters who came into this office (last year) into jobs or other meaningful situations."

Fifty job core graduates have in the past nine years gone on to college.

* * *

According to statistics, the average hourly wage for male job corns graduates has been $2.90, for women, $2.13.

(The reason for the discrepancy between the wages of the two sexes was not given, but Mrs. Williams laughingly added, "why do we always get less? You haven't experienced anything until you're black and a female!").

* * *

Initiated in December, 1964, the basic idea behind the program was to interest young men and women in the idea of a residential setting where they could learn a vocation and receive educational and social skills training.

Job Corp remains unique because it is the only residential manpower training program that exists.

ROSETTA B. WILLIAMS
Program Manager
Job Corps Services
Balto., City

Mrs. Williams, a graduate of Morgan State College, entered the Job Corps program in 1967 as the Gate House coordinator in Baltimore, a program which she also initiated.

The primary function of Gatehouse is to find jobs and provide supplementary services — housing legal and medical aid — annually to some 1,400 job corps graduates.

"We did so well that Mrs. Pine and I did training across the country. There are now 75 Gatehouses across the country, including New York, Illinois and California," she said.

* * *

Currently, there are 73 Job Corps centers throughout the country which served 24,000 youths in the fiscal year 1973.

The locale to which a job corps trainee is sent, depends on the type of training he desires.

For instance, an individual wishing to become a technician would be sent to an urban center while an individual interested in agriculture would be assigned to a rural locale.

* * *

With the summer months approaching, Job Corps and other self-help organizations will be confronted with the dilemma of distributing a handful of jobs, to thousands of applicants.

"Its going to be difficult," she admitted; but optimistically added that with the cooperation of various agencies, the program should be able to "provide meaningful jobs."

* * *

Despite the program's apparent success, Mrs. Williams admits she has found the task of securing jobs for those under 18 to be somewhat of a problem.

"It's difficult," she explained," because of certain laws which prohibit employment and a reluctance on the part of employers to hire them.

"Basically," she added as an afterthought, "the biggest problem is selling the idea to employers."

* * *

To qualify for the Job Corps program, one must be between 16-21 years old, be from poverty level income (as provided by federal guidelines), must have no serious mental or physical defects, and must have no serious criminal offense on his/her record.

For additional information, interested persons should contact Mrs. Rosetta Williams, director of the Job Corps program-701 St. Paul Street. Room 101 or phone 396-5600.
