Jack Hodge gets news editor post

Jack Hodge, who worked in various positions for the AFRO from 1954 to 1964, has been named news editor for the Baltimore News American, a Hearst newspaper.

As the first black news editor for the daily paper, Hodge's job deals mainly with deciding what news will be placed on pages one, two and three of the paper, and with page make-up.

He says most of the news for these pages is usually of national and international scope and that his job is to "prehent the best all-around views."

The job is demanding and he works late night and early morning hours in order to supervise the actual page make-up on the composing room floor.

Hodge started his career with the AFRO as a cub reporter, working during summer vacations from college, and had advanced to assistant managing editor of the AFRO's National Edition when he resigned to take a position with the News American.

Having attended Bluefield State College, Bluefield, W. Va., and West Virginia State Institute, Hodge says he believes he became the first black undergraduate journalism student at West Virginia University and was the first of his race to receive the bachelor's degree in journalism from the university.

In 1954 he took a full-time job at the AFRO as police reporter and took up permanent residence in Baltimore. He and Mrs. Margaret Hodge, Baltimore, have been married for 17 years.

Mrs. Hodge, a graduate of Baltimore's Coppin State College, is a public school teacher. She also studied at Baltimore's Morgan State College, the University of Minnesota and Temple University in Philadelphia.

The couple now resides in Columbia City, about 20 miles outside of Baltimore. Mrs. Hodge attends the St. Johns Episcopal Church Interfaith Center. Her husband holds membership in Douglass Memorial Church in Baltimore, where he also serves on the finance committee.

Hodge is also a member of the Upper Swansville Neighborhood Association in Columbia and a member of the NAACP.

He is spending the first two weeks of June in New York attending a seminar for editors sponsored by the American Press Institute at Columbia University.

Seek kids with July 4 birthday

The Baltimore City Bureau of Recreation in cooperation with the city of Philadelphia is searching for boys and girls between the ages of 12 and 15 who have birthdays on July 4.

The city of Philadelphia, birthplace of American liberty, is planning a large Independence Day celebration and wants to include a special group of children in the festivities.

Youngsters who meet the age and birthdate requirements must write a composition in 300 words or less describing "What My American Freedoms Mean To Me?"

Winners will be invited to share the platform with top national, state and local government officials, as well as stars of stage, screen and television at the most important Independence Day celebration in the country.

The essay must be sent to Miss Virginia S. Baker, Baltimore City Bureau of Recreation 1129 North Calvert St., 21202. It must be accompanied by a recent photograph of the candidate and a letter containing home address, telephone number, age, birthdate and school attended.

A winner will be selected from each of the thirteen original states. He or she will be awarded the title of Yankee Doodle Dandy and will be brought to Philadelphia, accompanied by an adult chaperone of his choosing for an all-expense paid trip for both from July 1 to July 4.

Week's food economies

When June rolls around on the calendar, it is always Dairy Month. If you seek value for your food dollar, the dairy case is the place to look, says Virginia McLuckie, food economist, Baltimore office, Cooperative Extension Service, University of Maryland.

The dairy industry is one of the largest agricultural enterprises in Maryland. Usually, it is an annual race between the dairy and poultry industry for top rank in agriculture dollars.

The dairy, meaning milk and milk products, present much food value for the cost of the item Milk provides essential nutrients such as protein, fat, carbohydrates, vitamins, calcium and other minerals.

In the past year, there have been some changes in the Milk Code which governs the production, processing, labeling and distribution of milk and milk products. The new code concerns itself with shelf dating and labeling and standards of identity that are a protection and a guide for consumers.

The seven-day from pasteurization on fluid milk requires that the milk be packaged, transported and stored at temperatures of 45 degrees F or less. Kept at this temperature at home, the milk will remain wholesome several days after the "sell by" date.

The standards of identity have made it possible for us to have low fat milk and products so consumers are sure of what the product contains. Whole milk with 3.5 per cent butterfat may be fortified with added milk solids and vitamin D. The low fat milks, 0.5 per cent to 2 per cent and skim milk at 0.5 per cent may also be fortified with milk solids and Vitamin A and D. The vitamins, minerals and milk solids additions may be added in approved amounts and by approved methods.

These additions, as well as milk fat amounts in low fat milks, will be in common names on the label which is usually on the pour spout side of cartoned milk. The milk you choose will be your preference, but for your information, the label tells the story of the contents accurately.

You never outgrow the need for milk, a pint daily for adults and four to five 8-oz. servings daily for children and teenagers. Be sure to get your daily milk group quota whether you drink it or eat it in cooked foods.
