Gov. for Moriah

Following a regular Thursday news conference, Governor Mandel took an informal stroll over to the Mt. Moriah AME Church in Annapolis to take a personal look at the 99-year-old padlocked Victorian Gothic structure.

He acknowledged that the church is presently owned by Anne Arundel County and that this situation poses legal problems in terms of any possible state intervention.

He said that he had attempted on several occasions to reach Anne Arundel County Executive Joseph W. Alton Jr., but that to date the county executive had not returned his call.

* * *

In a meeting with ranking black elected officials some weeks ago, the governor had indicated he would contact Mr. Alton to discuss the possibility of the state intervening to save the historic church.

The governor stressed that Mt. Moriah is a vital part of Annapolis and Maryland history and should be preserved.

He said that the historic structure has important symbolic meaning to a large segment of Maryland's population. It is especially important, Mr. Mandel noted, in light of the approaching 1976 bicentennial celebration.

* * *

Carroll Greene, director of the Annapolis project Maryland Commission on Negro History and Culture, pointed out that "Thousands of Maryland school children, black and white, are bussed to Annapolis yearly yet there is nothing here to reflect the history and positive contributions made by black citizens over 300 years."

"Mt. Moriah is not just a local cause,"he added "it is a cause for all Marylanders, especially black Marylanders."

"If we don't make a

Mello Moved From Western

MORE ARRESTS COMING, SIGNAL BIG SCANDAL

Police, citizens charged Capt. Mello replaced

By MARY CURTIS

Two black police officers, Sgt. Alfred E. Gundy, 38, and Patrolman James M. Thompson, 51, were among the 13 policemen and 20 civilians arrested Thursday and charged with participation in illegal gambling operations in West Baltimore.

U. S. Attorney George Beall and FBI Chief Thomas Farrow announced that the crackdown is the result of intensive investigations carried on over a year by the FBI with the assistance of Police Commissioner Donald Pomerleau" the city police and Beall's office.

A special Grand Jury returned the two indictments before District Court Judge C. Stanley Blair.

12 FROM WESTERN

Twelve of the officers indicted are from the Western district. The other officer and the ex-detective previously served there.

Four of the civilians work at Diamond Cab Co. in the 1900 block Ashburton St. The two locations were apparently the main targets of the investigation.

The Grand Jury has also been looking into other areas of police corruption, including gambling and prostitution.

SEALED INDICTMENTS

As a result of six sealed indictments handed down

Captain Dennis Mello, chief of Western District since 1966 and first black Police Department head ever appointed, has been removed from his post. A white commander has been named to replace him.

Questions arise as to the "why" of the replacement in the all-black area. Residents have long expressed dismay at a predominance of white officers under Capt. Mello.

Another question that came Thursday, is where is Captain Mello?

Nobody seemed to know as the news of the federal indictments which involved 12 of his officers, gripped the city Thursday.

As the news spread, there were speculations galore that Capt. Mello had been fired.

Citizens are now asking: "Who are the stool pigeons? Is the department witch-hunting high ranking black officers again? Is the white captain put in his place at Western to prepare for a "long hot summer?"

In the crackdown on alleged "rackets participation" Thursday, a dozen of Mello's officers were arrested and charged.

SYKESVILLE State Police from nearby Westminster were called to this small town Wednesday night when young blacks and whites clashed at a dance given at the local fire house.

Father's Day Special

By BILL RHODEN

It's not that John "Pops" Freeland doesn't like Father's Day, it's just that after a century of sending and receiving cards, one Father's Day is just like the last one. "Pops" is 107-years-old.

Born a slave in 1866, Mr. Freeland worked on a huge farm in Towson, Maryland until he was seven years of age.

It was at that time he decided to escape the rigors of slavery, so he walked to York, Pennsylvania and began working in that town's fire house.

Mr. Freeland still lives in York. Some 99 years and 35 grandchildren later, he says he feels great.

"I'm feeling as good as if I was 19," Pops recently said.

As a matter of fact, he is probably in better health than a lot of 19-year-olds!

He has outlived two wives, one of whom lived to be 104, and seven of his 12 children.

"Pops" youngest son is Samuel A. Freeland, 66, of Baltimore, the only immediate member of the family not living in York.

According to Samuel, his father's formula for longevity is: "He told me he eats mostly green vegetables and drinks good whiskey. That's what help keep him healthy and strong. home-made whisky, the good stuff!

"We're all very very proud of him. The family will meet in York Father's Day. Surviving children are: Louis Freeland, 78, John Freeland Jr., 75, Bertha Freeland, 60, all of York.

REASON TO BE HAPPY — Samuel Freeland, 66, of 1421 N. Dukeland Ave., will go to York, Pa. Sunday for Father's Day with his 107-year-old, John "Pops" Freeland.

"I'm feeling as good as if I were 19," John "Pops" Freeland said recently. Mr. Freeland, who celebrated his 107th birthday in March, is staying at Pleasant Acres Nursing Home, where he retains the distinction of being the oldest individual ever admitted there, when he was a mere 105. Mr. Freeland has five living children, ranging in age from 60 to 78. He also has 35 grandchildren and scores of great grandchildren.

Funeral Director Made Burial Nightmare: Mom

By CHARLES LUDLOW

"It was a joke," said Mrs. Gloria Mae Johnson, 40, of Winston Ave. in describing the recent burial of her son David A. Johnson.

He died of smoke inhalation May 26 in Baltimore City Jail according t police reports.

In a sworn statement to the AFRO Wednesday, Mrs. Johnson charged the funeral director who handled her son's burial May 31 with gross overcharges and causing her extreme mental anguish.

The funeral director named in the statement is a Northwest Baltimore mortician.

"My son was nothing to him (the funeral director) but a dollar sign," Mrs. Johnson said.

"He (the funeral director) overcharged us," she said. "And then he said he would not bury David without the full payment. The funeral bill came to $1,289.50."

NO COMMENT

A spokeman for the funeral home told the AFRO Thursday that the owner was out-of-town and unavailable for comment.

The person asked to remain unidentified and said the mortician would return next Tuesday or Wednesday.

JAIL DEATH

Mrs. Johnson, who is also calling for a full investigation into her son's death in jail, said Thursday she has talked to a lawyer about her complaints against the funeral home.

On a funeral bill marked paid-in-full, Mrs. Johnson showed the AFRO how she was charged $42.50 for newspaper death notices.

OVERCHARGED

Next to the newspaper notices entry was 'two days' and then the amount charged.

An investigation showed that a death notice for David A. Johnson appeared in only one of Baltimore City's three major papers. It was printed twice — Monday, May 28, and Tuesday, May 29. The newspaper's advertised price for death notices is 38 cents a line and the notice had 17 lines each day. The price should have been $12.92 — price $29.58 less than what Mrs. Johnson paid.

A mother of eight living children, Mrs. Johnson said she had questioned the mortician about the apparently high cost for the newspaper death notices and he defended the $42.50 price.

Mrs. Johnson also said the mortician defused to put a death notice in AFRO, despite her request.

NO INSURANCE

"I asked for a funeral between $700-800," Mrs. Johnson said. "I told him Saturday May 26 that I could not afford more because I did not have insurance to cover David's funeral.

The funeral home had already recovered the body from City Morgue, before he showed me an itemized bill. I said I would pay as much money as possible, but I did not have $1,300.

"I gave him David's bank book for a $100 savings account," Mrs. Johnson said.

INTERRUPTS WAKE

"Trouble began Tuesday May 29, Mrs. Johnson said in her statement, when the mortician requested her and her husband, Ernest

Mother of 16 100 years old, visits AFRO

Born in Howard County, Md., 100 years ago and now living in Baltimore, Mrs. Elizabeth Warfield made her first visit to the AFRO office Wednesday.

With only the aid of a cane, Mrs. Warfield rode the bus from her Etting St., home where she lives with her grandson, Gene Jackson, 72. Mother of 16, she has three children living. They are Mrs. Agnes Cooper, Russell and George Warfield.

Mrs. Warfield's advice for a long life, "I took care of myself and I didn't run around like they do today. I thank God for my time."

OUR DARLING — Mrs. Elizabeth Warfield, age 100, earns this title for a very good reason. Wednesday she arrived at the AFRO Office on the bus to tell us about herself and family. It was 89 degrees but the vivacious, interesting lady was cool and calm. (AFRO Staff Photo by Fletcher Roberts)
