Russell files papers answering community group's petition

George L. Russell Jr., Provident Hospital court-appointed receiver, filed papers in Circuit Court last week, answering a petition to intervene filed by the Community Health Council.

The council wants the court to grant them the power to intervene into the actions involving the operation of Provident. They wish to be heard "with reference to all pending and future proposed orders" which might affect their interests.

Mr. Russell's papers contend that "none of the petitioners have the right to intervene as none has shown a sufficient interest which is being adversely affected by any decision of the receiver."

The petitioners are Dr. Oakley Saunders, a member of general staff but not an employee of Provident; Dr. William Quivers, chief of Pediatrics at Provident; and Roosevelt Duncan, Mrs. Erma Perry, Mrs. Carlene Morgan, residents of Baltimore who are served by Provident.

Mr. Russell's petition calls the request to review receiver and court actions "absurd." It said such a practice "would lead to the administration of thousands of individual positions on every conceivable decision confronting the receiver."

Mr. Russell feels that he cannot perform his funtions of reorganizing and readjusing finances of Provident "if every person claiming to be remotely or indirectly affected by the Hospital's hardships is given the right to review, approve, and obstruct the actions of the receiver, which already are subject to complete review and approval by the court."

Mr. Russell urges that the requests and motions filed by the petitioners be denied.

He co-filed the action with his attorneys J. Martin McDonough and Jerome Asch.

Other motions filed by the Community Health Council are ones to clarify the order of court creating receivership, to amend the receivership order and to review the actions of the receiver.

The council strongly asks for a report regarding Russell's dismissal of 143 employees, specifically the dismissal of Dr. C. Alex Alexander, former Director of Medical Affairs at Provident.
