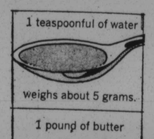
Changing Times: The Next Thing Is The Metric System

Present measurements will soon be 'old hat'

'...it would seem almost impossible to design a system more easily learned than the metric system of measurement.'
—20th Yearbook, National Council of Teachers of Mathematics

Ready or not, the metric system will soon be our way of life. This decimal system of weights and measures, similar to our money system, is used internationally except in the U.S.

All of the measurements now in use, the "English System," will be old-hat by 1984.



Under the metric system, there will be no more miles. Instead, there will be kilometers, (0.621 miles). A trip from Baltimore to Washington will be 60 kilometer, not 40 miles.

At the supermarket, we will buy liters (1.0567 quarts) of milk instead of gallons and quarts.

Sugar will be sold by grams, (15.432 grains or one teaspoon). And a pound of butter will be sold as 454 grams.

A blistering day will be 35 degree centigrade, instead of near 95 degrees fahrenheit.

By 1974

According to Wilmer L. Jones, coordinator of Mathematics for the Baltimore public schools, "The Maryland State Board of Education's recent resolution (1973-28) directed various school districts in the state to begin 'phase in' steps in 1974."

He said, "A complete switch over to the new system will require at least 10 years.

"We are in the introduction stage. There must be massive training of teachers before the metric system can be completely effective."

Maryland's "phase in" strategy follows a U.S. Department of Commerce recommendation that the metric system be introduced as a national system by 1984.

Congress is presently considering a bill that will mandate conversion from the "English System' to the metric system on a national basis.

STARTS IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

Metric measurements will be introduced at the elementary school level and continue through 12th grade.

A survey taken by the AFRO shows that preparation for adopting the new system of mathematics is in various stages in the city's schools.

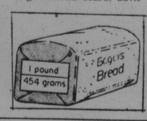
This "new" way to teach figures and measurements, however, meets with hearty approval by the majority of school principals.

Irvin Epstein, principal of David W. Weglein Elementary School, says, "It is simple to teach children from scratch. There is a committee working on development of a program to teach metric measurements in the school. I received the information today (Tuesday) on the school. I received the information today (Tuesday) on its progress. Our teachers are aware of metric system."

TEACHERS ENTHUSIASTIC

An enthusiastic response to the new system came from James Oxings, principal of Eutaw Marshburn Elementary School.

He said, "We are holding seminars with the faculty on a voluntary basis each Friday morning. We have a large bulletin board, advising teachers and students to think metric."



"I am pleased that it is being done," Mrs. Doris L. Hammond, principle of Steuart Hill Elementary School told the AFRO.

"I was chairman of the committee that wrote the present mathematics guide, some five or six years ago. We made reference that the metric system be taught in public schools then.

"We have some groups working with children and parents to acquaint them with the system."

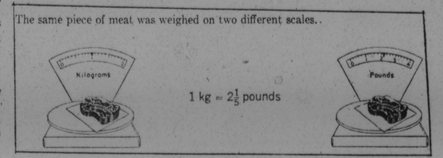
"We have received a communication indicating it is in the future," Miss Mildred A. Winter, principal of James McHenry Elementary School said. "Material has been ordered for teacher information."

James Mosher Elementary School No. 144, Principal, Mrs. Geo. Diggs said, "No plans are being made. Information concerning the metric system has just come in from the regional office and we have not yet had time to do anything."

JUNIOR HIGH LEVEL

Introduction is moving equally as fast on the junior high school level.

Samuel Billups, principal of Pimlico Junior High School No. 222 said, "We are orienting teachers in the metric system. Textbooks on order include expanded units in that area. We will gradually shift into a six weeks period on metric measurements. Theoretically Mathematics and science people have always been up-to-date on metric guides."



Booker T. Washington Junior High School. Principal James R. Hite comments, "Right now, we are at the talking stage. We are familiarizing teachers with the system. We have received no directives other
