Miss Clolita Williams

UMBC star also has black belt

When Clolita Williams, buyer in the purchasing department, meets new people, either professionally or socially, she often finds that her reputation has preceded her.

After all, it's not every day that one meets a young woman with black belt in karate.

Her skill in the art of self defense is not Miss Williams' only claim to fame. She will appear in the University of Maryland, Baltimore Campus's production of "Prime of Miss Jean Brodie," Nov. 28 - 30 and Dec. 1, 6-8.

Miss Williams said her part, as the physical education teacher, involves some gymnastics as well as dramatic acting.

Miss Williams became involved with the theater group at UMBC while she was a full time student there last year.

She is still attending school part time and is completing her studies toward a degree in secondary education, with a specialty in speech and drama.

Belfield is college radio staff member

Michael Belfield is a staff member of radio station WFNM at Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa.

The student-run station is broadcasting for the first time this year as an educational radio station, licensed by the Federal Communications Commission.

The station reaches an audience exceeding 200,000 persons within a 10-15 mile radius of F and M's Lancaster campus. The station is on the air from 4 p.m. to 2 a.m. daily.

He is the son of Mrs. Jessye Belfield, 1142 Myrtle Ave. and a 1971 graduate of Edmondson High School.

A.P. RANDOLPH

Brailey is A.P. Randolph dinner speaker

Del. Troy Brailey, (D-4th) interim chairman of the Baltimore City delegation in Annapolis, will be a speaker at a testimonial dinner in honor of A. Philip Randolph, Dec. 7, in New York City.

Randolph, founder and President Emeritus of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, is hailed as the "Father" of civil rights leaders. He was the first person in America to be arrested for speaking out against segregation.

He was arrested in 1917 by the U.S. Department of Justice while speaking in Cleveland.

Mr. Randolph was also chairman and organizer of the 1963 historic March on Washington.

Mrs. Woodard of Ulman Ave.

Funeral services were held today (Friday) at the Elks Home for Mrs. Mildred Woodard, 47,2900 block Ulman Ave.

Mrs. Gladys Isaac, mother of the deceased, stated, "She went to work Monday morning and later went to the doctor. He gave her a needle and rushed her to Provident Hospital where she died."

For 17 years, Mrs. Woodard was employed as a cook. She was a member of the Elks and the Eastern Star. Her hobby was collecting salt and pepper shakers. Her mother said, "She had collected over 30 sets from around the world."

In addition to her mother, Mrs. Woodard is survived by a daughter, Miss Jacqueline Woodard; three sons, Benny, Edward and William Woodard; three grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. Patricia Knight, a brother, Douglas Isaac. She is buried in Arbutus Cemetery.

New Fallstaff student council officers sworn

Fallstaff Middle School, which opened its doors in September, has inducted members and officers of its student council.

Officers are Miss Bonnie Berman, president; Miss Muriel Strickland, vice president; Miss Susan Duckett, secretary, and Russell Kelsey, treasurer.

All candidates worked to compose the oath of office for the new officials and the pledge for student council members.

Book written by professor at Coppin

A new approach to urban mass transportation utilizing aircraft is the subject of a book edited by Dr. Richard D. Bright, associate professor of political science at Coppin State College.

"Urban Mass Air Transportation" is published by the U.S. Department of Transportation, and was released this fall by the Urban Mass Transportation Administration.

Esskay darkens well-known roof sign

A Highlandtown landmark and nighttime beacon for three decades was darkened when the Esskay Quality Meat Company's lighted roof sign became a casualty of the company's program to help conserve energy during the present crisis.

All of its other remaining illuminated outdoor signs have also been turned off.

William G. Hupfeldt, president, also announced a comprehensive plan, effective at once, designed to materially reduce Esskay's consumption of gasoline and electricity for the duration of the emergency.

Brooks seeks public aid for children

Brooks Robinson, Oriole third baseman, is chairman of the Goodwill Industry Shoes for School drive and is seeking the public's support.

All contributions are tax deductible and will go toward buying shoes and socks for underprivileged children and their families.

Man loses suit against mortician

Floyd Bates of 1200 block N. Gay St. filed a suit in Superior Court against Elroy O. Wilson, a funeral director and Sharp Street Memorial United Methodist Church, owner of Mount Auburn Cemetery.

The suit was filed May 19, 1972 for $500,000 punitive damages.

The verdict was granted last Tuesday in favor of the defendants, Mr. Wilson and Sharp Street Memorial United Methodist Church.

In the record, Mr. Bates states for the sum of $650 he hired Mr. Wilson to bury the remains of his mother.

The plaintiff claims "Among the services, Mr. Wilson contracted to supply in addition to embalming and directing the funeral, was the arrangement for the purchase of a gravesite and the lowering of the body.

Mr. Bates claims "The funeral director buried his mother in a gravesite in Mount Auburn Cemetery and lost or otherwise failed to show him the location of the grave.

"Court record state he is still unable to locate his mother's grave and Mr. Wilson failed to perform his professional duty as an undertaker by failing to supervise the burial properly and in a workmanlike manner.

Mr. Bates states on May 30, 1970 he complained to one of Mr. Wilson's employees. He wanted to know the number of the gravesite. Court records reveal, "They looked at the book and there was no number there."

According to court records, Mr. Wilson showed the plaintiff the location of his mother's grave.

Historic school gets another lease on life

Thanks to the ingenuity of the Board of School Commissioners, an historic school will get new life and a community will get a recreation center.

Public School No. 129, erected in 1877 and now located at Pierce and Ridgely Streets was officially transferred to the Department of Economic Development at a recent meeting of the Board of School Commissioners.

The building will be used by the Industry and Community Together Program as a multi-purpose neighborhood recreation center.

* * *

In 1958, the school's interior was destroyed by fire, but so great was the need for class space that the building was quickly remodeled and reoccupied the following year.

Just two years ago, the school was closed to pupils and after a survey taken last year indicated that it would take too much money to restore the building, it looked as though the educational days of the ancient school were over.

Because of the survey's results the Board of School Commissioners decided to remove the building from the inventory of Baltimore City Public Schools.

So like many retired educators, the building continues to serve the community in a different role.

Art of Playboy

Beyond Illustration, the Art of Playboy, a retrospective exhibition of art from the pages of Playboy magazine, will open at the Gallery of Art at Morgan State College on Monday, Dec. 3. The show will continue through Friday, Dec. 21.

Teen club needs aid

The Teen Club at the Smith Worsfold Recreation Center, School No. 129, is attempting to convert one of the center's rooms into a youth lounge.

Persons interested in donating used or repairable furnishings, such as: sofas, carpets, chairs, lamps or tables should contact either Debbie Hassell, Latanja Robertson or Christopher Lyles at 539-0188 after 4 p.m. weekdays.

Hospital requirements set

Dr. Neil Solomon, Maryland secretary of health and mental hygiene, has reaffirmed his intention to close the Maryland Penitentiary Hospital today, Nov. 29, unless adequate safeguards set by the department's Division of Licensure and Certification are met by that date.

He said he would rescind his order if the following requirements are met:

That there be adequate licensed nurse coverage 24 hours-a-day, seven days-a-week, including holidays.

That a pharmacist be employed to cover weekends and holidays, in order to assure availability of a pharmacist seven days per week.

That medications be administered only by licensed nurses, or under the supervision of licensed nurses.

Warning on pet feeding

Dr. Benjamin D. Whitehurst, director of the Department of Health and Mental Hygiene's Preventive Medicine Administration, says when kitchen utensils used to open cans and for other unrelated pet food use are also used in and around human food without proper washing and sanitizing, the pet owner is risking a potentially severe or even fatal case of food poisoning.

The reason, Maryland's chief public health veterinarian, Dr. Kenneth L. Crawford, points out, is because a large part of the meat product incorporated into pet foods are derived from uninspected sources of slaughter, or from animals classified as dead, dying, diseased or disabled.

Youngsters get consumer-ed

If the Council of Better Business Bureau, NBC Television and the Muppets have their ways, tomorrow's consumers will be the most savvy ever.

The puppets, the network and the council have combined forces to produce a new series of 12, 30-second public service messages designed at the 6 to 12-year-old audience.

The series features the Abominable Snowman, such adult themes as eating a balanced diet, getting the Geoffrey the Giraffe, Magnolia the Ostrich, Flamingo Flamingo and Albert the Chipmunk, all TV stars in their own right.

From the mouths of puppets, the series will stress most for your money and respect for the property of others as well as your own — all in a series of Junior Consumer Tips.

Women's group sets holiday 'fund-raiser'

The Women's League of East Baltimore is planning a "fun-raiser," Dec. 9, to obtain sufficient funds to finance holiday events.

All proceeds go to charity and the affair will be held in the Maritime Union Hall, 8 North Broadway, from 6 to 9 p.m.

For further information, write: 2503 East Preston Street, or phone 732-3350 or 235-6356, after 2 p.m. 342-2174.
