Discrimination has decreased, Secy. Mason tells students

By Sidney Kobre

"Racial discrimination has decreased considerably during the last two decades because public attitudes have changed."

The words are those of David R. Mason, secretary of the Department of Employment and Social Services of Maryland. He was speaking at the Community College of Baltimore's Tuesday Afternoon Lecture series.

The series is presented by the Department of Social Sciences, of which Clarence W. Blount is chairman, and by the Department of Student Activities, headed by Dr. Richard M. Turner, dean. John A. Faulkner is director.

The hour-long programs are open to the public, free of charge. They begin at 12:30.

* * *

Mr. Mason, who was introduced by President Harry Bard, related in a highly personal way his own work-experiences to illustrate how far minority groups have come since the 1940's, when he first began to work in Washington.

"At that time, there was segregation in restaurants and restrooms, and nearly everywhere else," the speaker narrated. "Even at the Maryland Employment Services segregation existed, and blacks could not even talk on the telephones.

"In the army, complete and total segregation was practiced in the mess halls, and blacks had to ride on the back of army buses and trucks.

"It may be hard to believe that such discrimination existed, but you must consider the temper of the times and the climate of opinion. There was, for example, no Human Relations Commission in existence.

"I entered law school, graduated and then began the private practice of law. I decided to apply for a position in the Maryland Employment Agency. After taking the examinations, I found that I was first on the list of eligibles. I did not get the job. The agency abolished the position."

* * *

In 1949, Mason recalled he became chairman of the Maryland Board of Parole, and was the first to become chairman of that agency. This was not a token appointment, for he had to make determinations about the parole of all inmates of Maryland correctional institutions.

In 1972, Mason was appointed secretary of the Maryland Department of Employment and Social Service,, which has 6,000 employees and a budget of about $300 million annually.

"The governor had sufficient confidence in me to make the appointment," Mason said. "That appointment indicates that the climate of opinion has changed." This was the same agency which had abolished the positions when Mr. Mason reached first on the list of eligibles about 30 years before.

"Today blacks are in important positions in government and elsewhere." It is to be noted that there are more blacks with competency than ever before."

* * *

Mr. Mason declared he does not believe there will be dramatic changes in the future, which will disappoint many. "The administration such as I head must work within the framework of the merit system and I must work within a budget, but many things can be accomplished within the framework of the law."

The speaker said that his agency does not practice discrimination, and he seeks to set the tone. Employes must have competency and must be prepared to hold certain jobs. "They are judged on competency, not color" the speaker asserted.

In answer to a question from the audience about job opportunities, Mason asserted that there was no great need for professional social workers now, but he expected to expand the number of eligibility technicians who needed the training provided in the Associate in Arts program.

These workers study the eligibility of those applying for welfare and make reports to the administrators.

Mr. Mason said he would be glad to work with President Bard on arrangements which would enable CCB graduates in social service programs to fill such positions.

Prof. Charles Bailey moderated the program.

"Big Star Fallin' Mama"

"BIG STAR FALLIN' MAMA: Five Women in Black Music" by Hettie Jones. Ages 12 up; Viking Press-Junior Books; $5.95.

Five black American women — Ma Rainey, Bessie Smith, Mahalia Jackson, Billie Holiday and Aretha Franklin — sang about the lives they led and the times they lived in, and created the music of a musical style we call the blues.

The rhythms and excitement of black music, the words and subjects of songs and chants, of Africa, and the words and subjects rose out of black people's experiences in America's deep South. Tempered by the addition of western harmonic patterns and influenced by the music of white Protestants, the classic blues "response-and call" pattern emerged first. Gospel also influenced by the music of African tradition and transformed it. Jazz and soul pushed black music in yet other directions.

The rhythms and excitement of black music, the words and subjects of songs and chants, of Africa, and the words and subjects rose out of black people's experiences in America's deep South. Hettie Jones traces the development of black music from the minstrel shows of the early 1800's to the Seventies, and talks about five women who knew how that music was sung, and what it meant.

Ma Rainey, short, plump and flashing diamonds and necklaces of fifty dollar gold pieces, who started singing the Southern circuit years old and was "discovered" by Paramount, when she was 38;

Bessie Smith, probably the most original and influential of the women, who brought the rapidly developing underground musical form to the mainstream;

Mahalia Jackson, who made the transition from a style of gospel singing as institution. Her extensive improvisational technique could "bend" a phrase "Lord, Lord, Lord, Lady, Lady, Lady
