upon arrival.

Boycotting Beer from white music to Southern speech Bears the imprint of the black man — so simply so, in fact, that one cannot divorce America from Blackness. Whatever it takes, have attempted to do so they have produced Americans, a different breed of cat.

For this country owes much more than a mere "nod" and a wink" to each black American. It owes him its very life and soul.

It was black life that paid this country's bills, laying the foundation for its economic system — though free labor, though free labor, black sweat, black blood, that built is collected in the form of cheap, exploited labor.

It was black life on the front lines of war that helped to be scuttled off into the back alleys of the city slums when they did escape the South.

The only "soul" America has is what black men have given to her. Even the most prejudiced white quite to thank his God that blacks have continued to prod the white conscience (if there is any) and press for the elevation of this country.

America also owes a debt of appreciation to the black lives who helped build it. It was after all, not Columbus but a black pilot who steered the discover the North Pole (the ship that discovered Peary by 45 minutes), and Sacajawea, who gave America its first black son.

Remember too, that blacks among them Antony and Sabella, a pioneer couple who settled on the Chicago site.

The contributions of black men and women along with those of the original settlers in Los Angeles were 40,000 free persons and 1,170 slaves.

It was black life that paid this country's bills, laying the foundation for its economic system — though free labor, black sweat, black blood, that built is collected in the form of cheap, exploited labor.

And, as if that were enough, 200,000 black men had to fight for their own freedom in the Civil War, only to be scuttled off into the back alleys of the city slums when they did escape the South.
