NEVER BEFORE in history of Baltimore has such a sit-down dinner occurred. The testimonial for Lawrence Cardinal Shehan May 21 was preceded by cocktails. The photo by AFRO staff photographer Roman Hankewycz shows the interracial group listening enraptured to the Cardinal after a full-course dinner and coffee. The auditorium which seated 4,000 on the main floor and four tiers above in a semi-circle, was draped in white gauze spangled with gold and silver multi-pointed stars.

A last interview with the Cardinal

'By Bill Rhoden

Less than six hours before he was to deliver his last major message as spiritual leader of over 400,000 Maryland Catholics, Lawrence Cardinal Shehan, relaxed in his downtown office and thought about the question this reporter had asked:

"Of all your accomplishments as head of the Baltimore Archdiocese, which one stands out most in your mind?

Surely, he would have to mention his 1962 order which ended segregation in all Maryland Catholic schools and institutions; or his crusade in the mid-sixties for open housing.

But the 76-year-old Apostolic Administrator mentioned none of these things, although he admitted that all of them were sources of great personal satisfaction.

"The most significant thing in my whole life," he stated "is that I did become a priest. That, to me, is more significant than anything else."

* * *

To be sure, his 12 years as head of the Baltimore See have made a very significant impact on both Catholics and non Catholics, black and white throughout the state.

Born just 20 odd miles from the Civic Center, Cardinal Shehan said that he is concerned about the present and future of Baltimore and that he would address his comments that evening to the city's past, present and future.

"I'd just like people to come away from the Civic Center tonight with a spirit of hope for the future of Baltimore," he said.

The profits of the largest sit-down dinner ever in Baltimore are to go to 29 inner city Catholic elementary schools which face serious financial difficulties, a reality which troubles the Cardinal Shehan.

"Religion ought to be a definite part of education. If you remove it you degrade it, you say religion isn't necessary."

Now that he has retired, the Cardinal says he will assist his successor, the Most Rev. William D. Borders, Bishop of Orlando, Fla., (scheduled for installation June 26), and "do whatever pastoral work is necessary."

Although he didn't predict where the Catholic Church is going, (only God can do that), the Cardinal said, "I hope the Catholic Church will continue to survive here. "If Baltimore does well, the church will do well."
