THEY NEEDED THAT! — Teammate Tommy Helms (19) extends glad hand to Cliff Johnson after latter's 2-run homer tied score for Houston Astros against Padres. Blow also triggered magnanimous gesture on part of management as reflected in scoreboard messge. But the glad hand and free beer went for naught. Padres went on to win 8-6.

Couldn't happen to nicer guy is Preakness reaction

By Sam Lacy

This AFRO reporter wagered on Little Current to win the 99th Preakness at Pimlico Saturday, but the handsome return at the mutual windows was only part of the satisfaction.

The owner of the horse, Joe Galbreath, and the victory could not have happened to a nicer man.

Galbreath aside from being the proprietor of Darby Dan Farm under whose colors Little Current ran, also owns the Pittsburgh Pirates baseball team.

* * *

For a number of years, Galbreath has maintained a reputation as one of the more liberal owners in the baseball major leagues — if not indeed the most liberal.

He was the first in either league to hire a black coach when he employed former second baseman Gene Baker in that capacity in 1964.

In 1966, he and his general manager, Joe Brown, elected to designate Baker rates shattered a precedent manager of Pittsburgh's Class B farm club at Batavia (N.Y.), the first time a black was put in charge of a club in the previously-closed baseball structure.

* * *

In 1959, the Pirates acquired the late Roberto Clemente via draft from the then Brooklyn Dodgers, and in short time a love affair between Galbreath and the talented Puerto Rican outfielder had blossomed.

Darby Dan's winner of the 1971 English and Irish sweepstakes was Roberto, a colt named for the Pirates' Clemente.

And, since the death of the young outfielder on the ill-fated mercy mission to Nicaragua in 1972, Galbreath and the Pirates have spearheaded a drive that has netted over $200,000 to the financing of a youth city in Clemente's name in Puerto Rico.

* * *

Earlier in 1972, the Pirates organized baseball by fielding an all-black starting lineup.

The battery of pitcher Dock Ellis and Manny Sanguillen was backed by an infield of Al Oliver, Rennie Stennett, Jackie Hernandez and Dave Cash, and an outfield of Willie Stargell, Gene Clines and Clemente.

As much as anything else perhaps, it is Galbreath's continuing affinity for Roberto's countrymen that Miguel Rivera was the jockey on Little Current on Saturday.

Rivera, who had ridden Rube the Great two weeks earlier in the Kentucky Derby, was recommended as the rider for Little Current in the second round of the Triple Crown series.

The recommendation came from Angel Cordero, the jockey who steered Cannonade to victory at Louisville, and another Puerto Rican.

Bullets to pick 13th in NBA draft Tuesday

LANDOVER, Md. — The Washington Bullets have the 13th selection in the NBA college draft, which will be held by conference call on May 28.

General manager Bob Ferry will be the Bullets' representative and he will be aided in the decision making by coach K. D. Jones, assistant coach Bernie Bickerstaff and scout Tom Rollefson.

Ferry will be able to select three players from the first 30 available. In addition to the 13th pick, he will have the 22nd and 30th. The 22nd pick, the fourth in the second round, came to the Bullets from Phoenix, through Los Angeles, for Stan Love.

After their own second-round selection the Bullets will not draft again until the fourth round. Their third-round selection went to Phoenix as partial payment for Walt Wesley.

* * *

The Bullets won their fourth consecutive division title with a 47-35 record, the same as the Los Angeles Lakers. The lakers won the coin flip for the 12th choice and the teams will alternate the 12th and 13th choice in each succeeding round.

Last coin flips have worked out well for the Bullets in the past. Former coach Gene Shue lost the flip twice, in 1967 and 1968. In both times the flip decided the first pick in the entire draft.

In 1967 the Bullets lost Jimmy Walker and drafted Earl Monroe. A year later they lost Elvin Hayes, but chose Wes Unseld. In both cases the Bullets came up with the Rookie of the Year.

* * *

Ferry has been in charge of the Bullets' scouting ever since the 1967 selection of Monroe. He had served as assistant coach and head scout when Shue was coaching. This is his first year as general manager.

Rollefson is also in his first year with the Bullets and he has scoured the nation's colleges for poential Bullets. Jones and Bickerstaff have watched some college games this year, when their coaching duties allowed. And Ferry still logged several thousand miles despite his increased administrative duties.

It's my responsibility on the show to talk to people and find out about their ideas. If someone in the audience is upset by a guest's point of view, I guess I'd rather risk his anger than shelter him from something unpleasant. I believe everyone must be heard."
