Church observes women's day

The women of Pennsylvania Avenue AME Zion Church observed their 43rd annual Women's Day recently. Mrs. Peulah Moore acted as general chairman.

Assisting Mrs. Moore at the 11 a.m. worship services were Mrs. Evelyn Brown, co-chairman, read the scripture lesson.

Following the services, dinner was served in the dinning area of the church.

At 3:30 p.m. Mrs. Helen M. Bailey, chairman of the Afternoon program gave the call to worship. Mrs. Mary S. Johnson, principal of Montebello Elementary School was the speaker.

Mrs. Johnson emphasized that God's grace is sufficient if we have the faith to endure the vicissitudes of life and keep love in our hearts.

Singing their hearts out at the evening program were the Bobian Sisters. Mrs. Fannie James, who contributed $300 to the church was named woman of the year.

Captain of the year was Mrs. Lucille Losane. The total amount of money raised was $30,330.50.

The Rev. Marshall H. Strickland is pastor of the church. Other participants on the program were Mrs. Tillatha Johnson, Mrs. Elizabeth Goines, Mrs. Juanita Heggie, Mrs. Julia King and Mrs. Simon Specializers.

Family Planning seeks consumer participation

A Family Planning Council composed of six health professionals and 14 consumers representatives has been named to provide the means to involve consumers in decisions concerning the City Health Department's Family Planning Program.

The Council was appointed in accordance with guidelines developed jointly by the federal funding agency, National Center for Family Planning Services, the Maryland State Department of Health and Mental Hygiene and the Baltimore City Health Department.

They are a means of assuring public cooperation and participation in family planning programs.

At its first meeting recently the Council stated it will maintain open lines of communication between the Baltimore City Health Department's Family Planning Service, the consumer and the Council, and to present valid grievances to the Baltimore City Health Department's Family Planning Service which may come to the attention of the Council.

Also, determined that all services provided for in the grant are being delivered to the consumer and would suggest changes as well as assist in establishing a system of referrals to other agencies when the City Health Department's Family Planning Service cannot meet the consumer's needs.

Anyone having a suggestion or grievance related to the City's Family Planning Programs, may call 396-4659.

City student featured in "Who's Who"

Calvin D. Robertson, 17, 2528 Boyd St., is one of 50,000 students nationwide featured in "Who's Who in American High School Students." He graduated tenth in Baltimore City College's Class of '74.

Students from over 20,000 public, private and parocchial high schools are recognized for their leadership in academics, athletics, activities or community service in the publication. Less than 3 per cent of the nation's high school students are awarded this recognition.

Robertson, the son of Mrs. Eunice Ridley and James Robertson, maintained an 85.68 academic average while working at the Enoch Pratt Free Library during his senior year.

His hobbies include photography, target shooting (he owns a 22 cal. single shot cub rifle) and traveling. He is also a member of Metropolitan Baptist Church.

Robertson plans to become a photoscychologist upon graduation from either the United States Air Force Academy or Ohio Institute of Technology.

Senior Citizens feted

Persons over 65 were feted on Monday and Fathers Day by the Church-Wide Sick Committee of the Fountain Baptist Church, 1215 Monument St. and the Senior Citizens Committee of the Board of Christian Education.

The committee, under the chairmanship of the Rev. David Shivers, welcomed the honorees to the morning services and on each occasion befitting sermons were delivered.

After services lunches were served the golden members on each occasion.

The reluctant dragons

By Don and Val Hymes

For the past two weeks, in every community in the nation, thousands of 18-year-olds have been spilling out of formal commencement exercises into the big world.

The caps and gowns look the same; the threatening clouds look the same: the flashes come from cubes instead of bulbs, but the parents are just as proud. And finally, there are the speeches. They tend to be the same, too.

The big difference, however, is in the audience. These are not children any more, remember. Most are voting adults, or will be by the November 5 general election, which means that they'll be eligible for the September 10 primary.

Women got the vote 50 years ago; it was only 10 years ago that free elections meant something to most blacks; and 18-through 20-year-olds got the vote 3 years ago. But their voting record is "deplorable."

That's the word used by the League of Women Voters. "Adults," says Maryland's president, Dale Balfour, "are bad enough with only about 55 per cent of eligible voters actually voting." Although exact figures are not available the young voters' tally is around 22 per cent — fewer than one in four, except in scattered areas.

One theory is that young people don't take advantage of their newly won franchise because they didn't really fight for it themselves. In most cases, the adults did it for them.

Another theory is that the democratic processes are too slow and frustrating for today's impatient youth, who is geared to the 30-minute television solution with two commercial breaks built in.

Or perhaps it's because politics and government service have gotten such a bad name over the past couple of years that young people are repelled.

Whatever it is, the League of Women Voters (which just gave men the vote) wants to come to the rescue. Founded 50 years ago to help new-ly franchised women understand their responsibilities, the League wants to turn now to youth and senior citizens. So do the National Organization for Women and the Women's Political Caucus.

This is signigicant in itself, because it finally begins to appear that women, ethnic groups, the young and the old may no longer have to band together for protection against the "majority." In fact, the latest group to be targeted for oppression is the white male over 40. Many are feeling it already.

So while young people aren't rushing to file for office, neither are their elders.

In fact, of the 1,300 people expected to run for state or regional offices, only 206 had filed by the end of last week. Since young voters are now adults, no age breakdown is available, but unless there is a specified age limit (25 for senator and 21 for delegate), an 18-year-old is as eligibe as a 50-year-old businessman to run for a local government or central committee.

One reason for the long statewide ballot is that the Democrats will hold a national mini-convention in Kansas City in December to write a new party charter. Delegates must be elected in a primary from every congressional district, and 18-year-olds, who desperately fought for representation at the 1972 convention, are eligible to run. But where are they?

If money is the problem — filing fees range from $10 to $200 in Maryland — the attorney general has ruled that it can be waived if the candidate can file an affidavit proving he cannot afford it.

It is obvious that Watergate and the corruption scandals are driving the incumbents out in droves. It also appears now that the same disillusionment, or some other unknown factor, has turned off the young adults as well to a much greater degree than expected.

When they are so badly needed as fresh new blood in a weakened political system, there is a dramatic irony. Of those who did register — the key step for candiacy — many neatly severed themselves from the right to vote or run in the primary by declining to affiliate with a major party.

That decision could be crucial if the young adult want to affect or change the political system people deal with every day. It is in the primary, for example, when party central committees and convention delegations are elected. And with so much of Maryland still under a one-party system, the primary is the only arena.

Thousands of young adults have not registered yet, however. For them it is not too late.

If they don't like the system, they certainly can't expect their elders — who created it — to change it for them.

Essex offers summer course for women

A special summer "Routine Breaker" is being organized at Essex Community College to give contemporary women, 21 or older, an opportunity to escape from the stress of routine and responsibility.

The program will operate from July 16 to 20 and will include camping at one central location with hikes of various lengths up to 15 miles, cycling, cavern exploration, and a rubber raft trip. Fireside seminars discussing contemporary issues will be held nightly.

Registration for the "Routine Breaker" should be completed prior to June 28 by contacting Dr. Andrew McDonald, chairman of the division of health, physical education and recreation at Essex Community College, 682-6000, ext. 394.

Md. Mental Health workshop elects officers

Melvin Moore Jr., director of Mental Health Services for the Baltimore City Health Department has been elected president of the Maryland Workshop for Mental Health at its third annual meeting.

Also elected to serve on the workshop staff are Neva Lewis, psychiatric nurse for Prince George's County Community Mental Health Program, as recording secretary; Kitty Broady, director of Public Relations for Provident Hospital Community Mental Health Center, as corresponding secretary; and Carol Petrelli of the Carroll County Health Department as treasurer.

School No. 71 eats its heart out

Over 250 students from Irvington Elementary School No. 71 were the guests of Mrs. Mattie F. Harris of Severna Park, Md. on June 18.

Mrs. Harris, whose daughter, Mrs. Angela McCrory teaches there, extended her home to the students for a day of fun, frolic and good food.

The menu included: charcoal broiled of beef, roast turkey, onion and green pepper sauce over macaroni twist, homemade baked beans, fresh watermelon and cantelope, toasted marshmellows and almonds and a variety of cakes.

Considering the above, the teachers, Mrs. (s) Lillian Hawkins, Eva Brown, Angela McCrory, Rosetta Carrington, Ann Ezell, Elsie Butcher and 15 parents didn't have to worry about a thing.

Fantini presses for new alternatives in education

Mario Fantini made his case for alternative education at the 1974 Maryland Conference for Educational Leadership in Baltimore last month.

"We need alternative education," said Dr. Fantini," because of a confluence of causes. One is the newly developed relationship between purveyors and consumers. Another is the idea that has come to permeate public thinking: that every citizen has a 'right' to education."

Dr. Fantini explained that these elements promote rising exnectations by citizens. "But," he added, "we live in a pluralistic society, a society in which people have varying ideas of what a quality education is.

"In the past," he said, "we tried to standardize education, offering a uniform product to all students. That policy cannot serve in a pluralistic society. It has given rise to a situation in which 40 per cent of our customers are discontented, and to the suspicion that the schools cannot deliver. If the schools aren't structured to serve everybody the schools will be victimized.

"We must give parents a choice not subject them to chance. Deprived children may need directive teachers, but independent children may need something else. We must offer diversified environments for learning.

We must match up the environment with the kid. People are different.

But the New Yorker didn't go overboard "Free Schools," he said "can close off options by offering joy and ecstasy but no reading."

Fantini would eliminate graduation requirements. Each child's option, he said, is equally legitimate. Graduation requirements, I.Q. groupings, and standardized tests push us towards uniformity.

Alternatives must be triggered by leadership, he said.

Alternative education in Maryland was the theme of eleven "assemblies" at the annual leadership conference.

In each of the well attended assemblies representatives of one or more local school systems described alternative programs now under way.

Topics included cooperative work experience as an educational alternative, early childhood education, environmental education, guidance services, increased curriculum flexibility, human relations, staff development, student involvement, and tutorial programs. Other topics included career education and educational media.

C.C.B. gets $65,000 federal grant

The Community College of Baltimore has received $65,000 in federal funds to continue a Special Veterans Program for one year.

These funds from the Office of Education are deaigned to motivate and assist disadvantaged students who have the potential to succeed in post secondary education but lack adequate high school preparation.
