Rev. Octavius Graham retires after 48 years as pastor

The Rev. H. Octavius Gra-Graham, pastor of Knox United Presbyterian Church will retire on July 11. His farewell sermon will be delivered on Sunday, 11 a.m. at 1214 N. Broadway.

The Rev. Mr. Graham has been preaching for 48 years. He and his wife, Mrs. Graham will move to Jacksonville, Fla.

The Presbytery of Baltimore through its Ministerial Relations Committee and the session of Knox Church will secure a new pastor for Knox. During the interim the session will see that the pulpit is supplied each week.

Knox Church was organized on the 20th of May, 1930, in a storefront formerly used as a colony by the Presbytery of Baltimore. It took Mr. Graham four years to perfect an organization.

Unfortunately many white people thought that blacks who were living in East Baltimore in an economically deprived area were not capable of understanding the intelligence and the orderly worship of the Presbyterian church. This statement helped the Rev. Mr. Grahamto tenaciously hold on to his vision and prove that a church could be organized and that no particular group had any monopoly over any denomination.

The days of the depression encouraged delay and favored the giving up of the original plan. Banks were closed, savings were lost and the small amount which Knox had saved as the beginning of a building fund, even that slipped away too.

Knox had a new lease on life in October, 1944, when with the help of the Presbytery a suitable building was secured at the corner of Ashland Avenue and Washington Street. Here at this corner with a small yard on the side, the minister began dreaming of a church to serve the community.

Knox Presbyterian has served the community with a nursery school, Boy and Girl Scouts recreation programs and other interesting activities.

Adults who were having problems sought help in coming to Knox. The church now has two nursery schools. The Rev. George Eggleston is director of the Community Center and Mrs. Gladys Combs is director of the federal program.

CCB to offer 88 courses this summer

By Dr. Sidney Kobre

Eighty-eight courses are being offered in the Second Summer Session of the Community College of Baltimore, beginning July 22.

The classes are given during the day, between 8-10. They are offered Monday through Friday.

Starting at 6 or 7 p.m., the evening classes meet Monday through Thursday. Thus, you can attend classes before or after work. The closing session for the evening classes will be held Aug. 22 and for the day classes, August 23.

Paul Beckham, director of the Off-Campus College Centers, said all over the city come ambitious adults.

"High school seniors and recent graduates will join the ranks of the present CCB students on the Liberty Campus. Also many home-makers who wish to acquire additional education or to prepare for careers outside their homes are expected to enroll."

Mr. Beckham urged residents "to join these eager and ambitious young people, and mature men and women who are making use of the summer to learn new viewpoints, deepen their knowledge and understanding and to move up in the professional and business world."

During the day, residents may choose from 58 courses, covering both sci-Michael Jones, Paul Madinities and career-oriented subjects.

In the business department, students may select from introduction to business mathematics, marketing and advertising. For a knowledge of data-processing, one of the fastest-growing professions, the students may enroll in business system design and procedures and the fundamentals of data-processing.

Wilkins acclaims NAACP strides

By Joseph P. Manguso

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Roy Wilkins, executive said Tuesday that aside director of the NAACP from opening opportunities for blacks, the nation's oldest civil rights organization had helped reshape public opinion and move America in a new directtion

Addressing the NAACP's 65th Annual Convention, Wilkins said the country had polished its national image by providing new opportunities for blacks and other minorities. But he said much remained to be done.

One major achievement, he said, was the successful effort to obtain back pay for black workers who had been denied equal employment.

"To maintain that this is a civil rights benefit to black citizens only is to ignore the tremendous return to the society as a whole," said Wilkins.

"It is a public relations dividend, an enhancement of America's national image, a build-up that has added its bit to our national character."

But he was especially critical of the U.S. House of Representatives for trying to outlaw school busing as a desegregation tool.

"The House members who support this bill want to repeal the Brown decision in 1954 and return blacks to the time before Plessy Vs. Ferguson (which approved separate but equal treatment) in 1896."

The U.S. Supreme Court overruled the Plessy decision in its landmark decision in the 1954 Brown case.

* * *

Wilkins pointed with pride to NAACP programs to reach the forgotten and neglected of society. He said special programs had been established to help black servicemen and prisonrs, including a newly organized branch at the Lewisburg, Pa., federal prison.

Wilkins' speech was devoid of any remarks about Watergate or President Nixon, who Monday had been branded as "anti-black" by NAACP board chairman Stephen G. Spottswood.
