GM gets Sept. deadline in discrimination case

The General Motors Corp until Sept. 3 to show cause why it should not be ordered to turn over personnel files and records of three black employees who have charged GM with racial discrimination.

Judge J. Harold Grady issued the deadline Tuesday after receiving a complaint from the Maryland State Commission on Human Relations stating that GM supplied only partial records of the three workers and deliberately deleted certain data before delivering the personnel information as delivered.

The three plaintiffs are Mrs. Jacqueline A. Thompson, who says she was fired without warning because she wore patched on her pants; Ronald R. Forbes and Joseph A. Stevens.

Mr. Forbes alleges he was the victim of repeated harassment and layoffs after he complained of overwork and poor working conditions. Mr. Stevens also accuses GM of harassment.

According to Phillip J. Tierney, legal counsel for the state commission; GM's personnel director, Andy Bolton, was served with a subpoena in 1972 to produce the personnel records within a week but failed to deliver complete files.
