Week's food economies

Fresh fruit has a way of making your meal interesting or a snack taste better and at the same time it gives you nutrients, says Virginia McLuckie, Food Economist, Cooperative Extension Service, University of Maryland.

When you shop at the fruit counter, consider the purchase of D'Anjou pears, apples, temple and navel oranges or mid-season juice oranges, grapefruit and bananas. These are fruits in more than adequate supply, priced reasonably and usually top quality. For winter, these shipped-in fruits are going to provide a lot of tasty eating. Look for quality points for each one.

D-Anjou pears are picked mature and ripen off the tree. The green skin color does not indicate ripeness but a softening of the flesh does. The hard pears will ripen at room temperature in a few days and the flesh will be white, smooth and juicy.

Bananas are higher in price than last year, but still a reasonably priced fruit. Buy them in the stage of ripeness that you wish to use immediately or select some that are more green so they last through the week. In the refrigerator, the skin will darken but the inside flesh will keep without further ripening. Bananas can be baked, and served in many ways.

Apples are plentiful. The Red and Golden Delicious, Romes, McIntosh and others are coming from storage. The best buy is usually the 3 pound film bag pack. Look for solid firm apples and buy the variety best suited to the use you make of them.

Citrus is in heavy supply, both frozen juice and fresh fruit. While the most economical way to get Vitamin C the year around is in frozen juice, there is merit in using the whole fruit when it is seasonally heavy supply.

Temple and navel oranges are recommended for out of hand eating, for fruit salads and desserts. Wedges or segments of oranges make the best kind of snack for after school or after super. Serve halves of juice oranges or grapefruit for breakfast or the first course of a meal. Select citrus heavy for its size. Skin imperfections do not affect interior quality.

Banana Sweet Casserole Potato

2 cups mashed cooked sweet potatoes
1 cup mashed bananas (3 medium)
1/3 (One-third) cup sour cream
1 egg
½ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon curry powder

In large mixing bowl, combine sweet potatoes, bananas, sour cream, egg, salt and curry powder. Beat until smooth. Turn into greased 1-quart casserole. Bake in 350 degree F. oven 20 minutes, until puffed and lightly browned.

Yield: 4 servings.

Lenten recipe

BARBECUE BAKED FISH

3 pounds pan-dressed fish or 2 pounds fish fillets
3 tablespoons margarine or butter
3 tablespoons lemon juice
¾ cup barbecue sauce, any type
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt and pepper, for sprinkling

Wash and dry fish. In small pan, melt margarine or butter. Mix in lemon juice, barbecue sauce and Worcestershire sauce. Pour ½ of sauce in shallow foil-lined baking pan. Sprinkle fish with salt and pepper and place in single layer in pan. Pour remaining sauce over fish.

Bake at 350 degrees F. until fish flakes easily when tested with a fork, 25 to 35 minutes.

Makes 6 servings.
