Kivie Kaplan dies; leader of NAACP

BOSTON — Kivie Kaplan, who began efforts in the area of civil rights by urging fellow industrialists to hire black workers during World War II, died Monday, May 5, in New York.

At the time of his death, Kaplan, 71, was serving as president of the national NAACP and vice chairman of the Union of American Hebrew Organizations.

He had been on the national board of directors of the NAACP since 1954 and became national president in 1966. Officials said he last year celebrated 50-years membership in the organization.

As chairman of the organization's life membership campaign he was credited with bringing the life member rolls to 12,000 fully paid and 30,000 subscribing, with an annual income of $300,000.

Top NAACP officials attended services at the Temple Israel in Boston for the man who once told his friends blacks were "ambitious to work in our factories but they need the chance, let's see what we can do."

Rebuffed by his friends, Kaplan proceeded in his efforts and by 1955 had black employes in major positions in his leather tanning factory.

"This is a challenge of brotherhoods all over the country to support the fight for full freedom for all," he said.

NAACP officials hailed Kaplan as "one of the most generous of men who knew no color and religion in his public and personal gifts for the benefit of mankind."

Kaplan was a driving force in making the Boston NAACP branch one of the national leaders. He was instrumental in recruitment of funds, and soon won offices of national leadership, including serving as treasurer of the organization.

Honorary treasurer of the Jewish Memorial Hospital in Boston, Kaplan was taken from an airplane in New York and rushed to a Flushing hospital where he was declared a victim of heart arrest by doctors.

He had retired several years ago and he and his wife, Emily, were involved in several philanthropic activities.

He is also survived by daughters Mrs. Sylvia Grossman and Mrs. Albert L. Green; son, Edward K. Kaplan, and grandchildren.

KIVIE KAPLAN.

Happiness is new shoes

By Robert M. Matthews IV

Needy families serviced by the Lafayette Square Multi-Service Center, received free new shoes Tuesday, thanks to the efforts of Officer John W. Harbin of the Police Department's Community Relations division.

The hardworking policeman, better known as "Officer Friendly," and John Tuber of the Thom McAn shoe stores provided 150 pairs of the new shoes to grateful Lafayette Square residents at the center on Lafayette Ave.

Squeals of delight were heard as youngsters and some senior citizens found a pair their size and to their liking Shoes in the latest styles from sneakers to stacked heels were made available.

Multi-Service staffers Ms. Rene Paunteleroy and Ms. Pat Jones; police community relation officers Sgt. Marian Crawford and Bob Whittington, were present to insure that everyone found a pair of shoes.

They were rewarded by the grateful smiles from parents and children, who were now one step ahead in the completion of their Easter wardrobe.

Speaking about Officer Harbin was Ms. Fauntleroy, who stated: "He is a man who cares. Not only is he very understanding but he will always show in one way or the other he is willing to help."

The AFRO salutes Officer Harbin and the Thom McAn Shoe stores for their concern.

Mount Ararat celebrates Youth Day

"Do you know the Lord? Is your heart right?" If your answer is 'No,' you need a resurrection.

The Rev. Dexter Wise III, made the above statement last Sunday to the youth of Mount Ararat Baptist Church, at their 19th annual Youth Day.

The Rev. Mr. Wise, 20, is associate minister of Central Baptist Church. Miss Jocelyn Hart presided at the 11 a.m. services.

The Rev. Mr. Wise will graduate from the University of Pennsylvania this month and will attend Harvard University in September, where he will major in theology.

He told the youth, "The church is in such a state we need a resurrect. If we are going to bring the church back to what it used to be, we don't need a revival, we need a resurrect.

"I found people out there in the world who have never been to church, know more about God than people who come to church every Sunday.

"We believe we can do it all by ourselves, but first you must have God."

"Why should I Care?" was the theme for Youth Day. Others who participated in the 11 a.m. services were Miss Carolyn Lewis, Andre Smallwood, Ms. McMillen, Steven Edwards, Miss Gail Lucas, Mrs. Gloria Williams, Miss Arnese Dorsey, Miss Linda Moore. Music was by the Youth Day Choir and the Ida M. Redd Echoes. The Rev. Samuel Redd is pastor.

A panel discussion was presented by the youth at 5 p.m. Participants were Leon Coleman, Dr. Dorothy Carter, Lee Lassiter, and Rev. William Johnson.
