Civil Rights shifted says Mrs. Burke

"Today, the Civil Rights Movement may not have the drama that it did during the 60's ... it's not as emotional.

"This is because the battleground has shifted ...but the power of the movement has not diminished."

Congresswoman Mr. Yvonne Braithwaite Burke (D. Calif.) was speaking before the 600 honor students at Morgan State College's Second Annual Honors Day Convocation April 30 at the college.

Mrs. Burke, first of her race from California elected to the House of Representatives noted that the news media have placed greater emphasis on the shift of desegregation from the South to the North.

Addressing herself to the educational problems among blacks, Mrs. Burke said, "The educational gap between blacks and whites is nearly gone. There's only one gap left ... the one in the amount that blacks earn. Black college graduates continue to earn at least $2,000 per year less than whites."

During the convocation the Departmental Honor Scholars, College Honor Scholars, Distinguished Honor Scholars and Dean's List Students were recognized.

LAGGING, CROSS BEAMS, and deck braces have been positioned in a 100' x 36' site at Preston St. and Eutaw Pl., as part of the structural support for the Bolton Hill station entrance. The station entrance was excavated to a depth of about 35 feet and structural bracing will be decked while the State Department of General Services constructs an elevated pedestrian walkway above the station entrance.

Rapid Transit construction set to begin this fall

The Mass Transit Administration of the Maryland Department of Transportation has announced that final design is underway on seven Baltimore City stations and tunnel sections of the region's Phase I rapid transit project.

Final design is the last developmental engineering process that occurs before the start of construction. It involves preparing the detailed drawings and specifications of what will be built.

Heavy construction is slated to begin in Baltimore City this fall.

* * *

The areas currently under final design include both tunnels and stations at Charles Center, Lexington Market, Bolton Hill, Laurens St., North Ave., Mondawmin and Inner Harbor.

* * *

To date, 55 engineering and architectural companies are working on the rapid transit project. These consultants and subconsultants, 28 of which are state and local firms, are also doing final design work on several systemwide elements including train control, fare collection and aerial support structures.

* * *

Much of the final design work is sub-contracted by the MTA's general consultant, Daniel, Mann, Johnson and Mendenhall/Kaiser Engineers, to individual design firms.

In turn, these firms create teams with other consulting firms to cover the many areas of engineering expertise needed to design this complex project.

* * *

The seven sections currently in the final design phase cover a distance of 5.5 miles through the central city area and are slated to be in subway.

Since the subway portion of the system is the most complex, it will be implemented in stages.

Following last October's groundbreaking ceremonies for the rapid transit system, construction of only the entrance to the Bolton Hill station begins. Excavation and structural bracing of the entrance is nearly finished.

* * *

Work on the entrance was begun first to prevent possible damage to a pedestrian walkway over the area planned by another state agency.

On completion, the rapid transit system will be 28 miles long and will travel from Owings Mills in the northwest to Marley, just south of Glen Burnie.

Current projections call for completion of the project in 1982.

THE UNUSUAL STORY OF A ONETIME DRUG USER

Man Alive's director reveals his past has lead to success

By Angela Chatman

The Man Alive Program, 2100 N. Charles St., has a new executive director.

The center, which provides a methadon maintenance program for hard core drug addicts is now headed by Richard Lane.

Mr. Lane, age 38, has been acting director since former head Granville Whitman left in August, 1974. And, despite past difficulties, he has experienced success as an administrator.

Lane was appointed executive director by the center's Board in October, 1974 but the action was not official until approved by the Federal Drug Abuse Administration two weeks ago.

Why did it take so long for the agency, which is required by law to investigate staff members for such program, to approve Lane?

Mr. Lane's answer is, because he is an ex-offender and drug addict with a record of four drug-related arrests and has spent 12 years in jail.

One other thing may have complicated approval of his appointment. Mr. Lane notes is that he is still on methadone maintenance and has been for eight years."I have to take the drug for the rest of my life", he said.

EARLY ADDICTION

The native East Baltimorean reveals he was first arrested in 1951 at age 14 for possession of narcotics and was sent to the Maryland Training School.

From 1951 to 1967, he was in and out of prison. He even served a 10 year term for possession and sale of narcotics, he states.

Prison did not serve as a deterrent for Lane.

There was no counseling for offenders and drugs were available, he discloses.

In 1952 he was introduced to heroin and became addicted while in the state reformatory, he asserts.

"I think it would have happened anywhere. There've always been drugs available," he told the AFRO.

He adds, when he was released from prison in 1967, he was still addicted.

Upon release on April 11 he went to see Dr. Emmett P. Davis, a general practitioner who had been operating the Man Alive Program in his Belair Rd. Office since 1966.

Lane says he had been a participant in other programs but they had not worked. Now he was ready to try again.

Not only did he become a participant in Davis' program, but he stayed on as an employee and has been with the center ever since.

His work has won him the Baltimore Jaycees 1971 Award for Outstanding Man of the Year.

PROGRAM

The Man Alive Program, which began in Dr. Davis' office, remained self-supporting until 1970 when it became funded by the state. Sixty percent of its funding comes from state while 40 per cent comes from the addicts who can pay the required $11 per week and from Medical Assistance payments for those who cannot.

In 1968, Dr. Davis, with the aid of Dr. Addison Pope and in conjunction with Provident Hospital, opened another drug treatment center on Mosher St.That center later became Provident's Project ADAPT.

In 1969, Man Alive moved to its present location.

It is strictly a methadone maintenance program and presently has a staff of 22 persons, including six counselors who serve 185 out-patients.

The majority of its participants are walk-ins or referrals who have been addicted 3 or more years and 98 per cent have been in jail for drug related offenses.

There are three levels of operation-administration, counseling and medical treatment. All is confidential. Everyone gets a physical examination at least once year. There is also a job referral program.

However, Lane noted that 75 per cent of the persons in the program were able to find their own jobs. "When you go to refer someone to get a job it's pretty difficult."

Three is also a group session Thursday nights for drug addicts who have become alcoholics. He noted that many addicts switch to alcohol addiction.

"We think that it's getting worse," he states.

A larger percentage of the persons who come to the center are now exhibiting signs of multiple drug addiction. Many are addicted to such common drugs as valium, barbiturates, and even methadone.

Mr. Lane states, "All of these are good drugs if you use them properly." They're very easy to get and I think it is the way a lot of young people are introduced to drugs."

Federal law requires that persons taking treatment be reviewed every two years. The length of treatment time is indefinite and many of the persons on the program will be on methadone maintenance for the rest of their lives.

Those who wish de-toxification are referred to Sinai Hospital. Lane himself has no faith in detoxification.

"I don't have that much faith in de-toxification. It would be nice for everybody to be drug free," he said.
