Woman's Afro bush bursts into flames from cigarette match

MRS. JULIA BATES (right) was saved from tragedy as fellow employes Freeman King Jr. put out the fire that left her head, face, ears, hands and arms with second and third degree burns.

According to the Fire Marshal's office, heat from the flaming Afro bush reached as high as 4,500 degrees. Eyewitnesses say the sudden ignition was like an explosion with the blaze going several feet upward.

A 27-year-old Belcamp, Harford County, Md. resident suffered second and third degree burns on her face, arms, ears and hands Oct. 3, 1974 when a match she was attempting to light a cigarette with popped into her freshly-sprayed Afro hairdo setting it entirely aflame.

Over a year later, May 29, 1975, the man who saved her life, Freeman King Jr., a fellow employee at the Bata Shoe Co., was given the highest Life-saving Award at a banquet at the Sparrows Point Country Club.

• • •

Mr. King received a standing ovation as the details of the unusual incident were given by Martin Mossa, president of the American Society of Safety Engineers, Chesapeake Chapter.

The accident which nearly cost Mrs. Julia Ann Bates her life came as she was sitting in the Bata Co. cafeteria with friends who said she was lighting her cigarette.

Police report the head of the match popped into her large Afro bush and it burst into flames.

Eyewitnesses told police it sounded like an explosion and estimate the flames went to over two feet high.

Witnesses say Mrs. Bates jumped up and started to run.

At great personal risk, Mr. King, also employed at Bata, attempted to put out the flames with Mrs. Bates' own coat but the nylon garment quickly melted.

Norman E. Jones, 18, Aberdeen, Md., standing by and wearing an insulated flight jacket, took it off, and threw it across the table to Mr. King.

• • •

Mr. King extinguished the blaze by covering the victim's head with the jacket. He used his hands to put out the blaze on other parts of her body.

Both Jones and King further extended help by keeping Mrs. Bates as calm as possible while pro-

Matron confesses she dumped sweetheart's body in Leakin Park

PLEA OF guilty to manslaughter gets woman, 25, 20-year term after the court is told how she and a friend drove the slain man in his own car and dragged him into the woods.

A 25-year-old woman, who killed her boyfriend at her home and then dumped his body in Leakin Park, has been sentenced to 20 years in prison.

Criminal Court Judge Solomon Baylor imposed sentence June 11 on Ms. Doris Williams, 8000 block Norwood Ave.

According to Assistant State's Attorney David Katz, Ms. Williams pleaded guilty to manslaughter and hand gun violation, several days after the Oct. 24, 1974 murder.

• • •

Testimony revealed William A. Barnett, 26, had been living with Ms. Williams for several years. However, the court was told Barnett had another girlfriend and was planning to move and marry her.

Police state relatives of Barnett had reported him missing and he had not been to work. Police found Barnett's body on Oct. 31, in Leakin Park off of the 4000 block Franklintown Rd.

• • •

Police report his car was also found in the Leakin Park area. Barnett was a graduate of Douglass High School and served two years in the Navy. He was employed at Western Electric Company.

According to the assistant state's attorney, Ms. Williams was "very jealous" and often argued with Barnett about his getting married to another woman.

The couple became involved in an argument around 7 a.m. last Oct. 24 and Mrs. Williams went to Barnett in the chest, back and stomach, according to testimony.

Court records state Ms. Williams called her sister and a friend and told them what she had done. Testimony revealed Ms. Williams told her friends she wanted to take the body to Leakin Park.

Court records reveal Barrett Bryant, a friend and Mrs. Williams went to Leakin Park in the victim's car and dragged his body to a wooded area.

• • •

Records placed before the court state Ms. Williams left Barnett's car on the street and destroyed the gun.

According to testimony, one week after the homicide another friend told Ms. Williams he was going to inform the police about the murder if she did not surrender. After talking to her father, he took her to the police department where she confessed to the crime.

The prosecutor told the court Bryant pleaded guilty to accessory after the fact and is now waiting to be sentenced.

LEAKIN PARK, the popular unofficial burial ground for slain men in 1973 and 1974, was the scene of the hiding place of the body of the unfaithful sweetheart, a Navy man of two years service.
