Former Dunbar teacher retires after 27 years

Lloyd McDonald, director of Student Relations for Baltimore City Public Schools, retired Monday after a career of almost 30 years in education.

In 1972, at the request of Superintendent Patterson, Mr. McDonald conceptualized and designed a program of Student Representatives. The program has a short but impressive three year history.

According to Mr. McDonald, the representatives act as a communications link between students and school personnel.

After establishing relationships with student and administrators, the representatives convey to the principal the students' feelings on how the school should be conducted.

* * *

Mr. McDonald began his career as a teacher in his native Texas. After a brief stint in the Army, he taught at Towson High while awaiting a position at Dunbar where he taught for 10 years before becoming a counselor in 1958.

Mr. McDonald remembers Dunbar as a fine school where the students were "obedient" and "nicer in the eyes of the teachers." He feels that the recent surge of freedom in education brought many problems with it.

He does, however, maintain a positive view of today's youth. He says, "The present generation will grow up stronger because of the experiences they've had."

Mr. McDonald was reared in Gary, Ind. during the depression years. He was in high school that he learned "a helping ethic" and considered becoming a social worker.

After graduating near the top of his class, he attended Prairie View State College where he earned his bachelor's degree. Mr. McDonald also did graduate studies at the University of Pennsylvania.

He is married to the former Lillian Seabury. His stepson, Wade Horsey, recently received the MBA degree from Harvard University and is presently working at a New York bank.

The couple also have a daughter, Ms. Kim McDonald, 19, who will begin her junior year at Morgan State University in the fall.

If you have a laundry tub next to your washer, save the hot sudsy water from the wash to clean barbecue grills, garden tools, oven racks, etc. You'll save water, soap and the energy needed for water heating.

Uninsured motorists to face penalty fee

Maryland motorists face a penalty fee of up to $40 should their vehicles become uninsured for any period of time after July 1. Ejner J. Johnson, State Motor Vehicle administrator, has warned.

Legislation enacted at the 1975 session of the Maryland General Assembly requires the Motor Vehicle Administration to assess the fee. Proceeds, according to the law, will be deposited to the account of the uninsured section of the Maryland Automobile Insurance Fund (MAIF).

"This is yet another step," said Johnson, "to deter motorists who would otherwise drive without insurance. Even a lapse in coverage of one day comes under the provisions of the new law."

Johnson added that the penalty fee is in addition to existing penalties for operating an uninsured motor vehicle in Maryland.

Under existing law, MVA can suspend the license plates of an uninsured vehicle, as well as the owner's driving privilege. More than 22,000 such suspensions have been imposed since July 1, 1974.

'Philly Sound' leaders deny deejay payola rap

By Mildred O'Neill

PHILADELPHIA — Top officials from "The Sound of Philadelphia," the distinctive music form produced through Gamble - Huff's Philadelphia International Records, say they're innocent of federal "payola" charges.

Nationally known stars operating under the TSOP umbrella include the O'Jays, Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes, the Three Degrees, M.F.S.B., Love Committee, City Limits, Billy Paul, Bunny Segler and Anthony White.

As a result of a massive, two-year probe the U.S. attorney's office in Newark won indictments last week against 19 individuals and 6 corporations on charges of conspiracy, mail fraud, income-tax evasion, bribery and violation of a federal payola statute.

* * *

Caught up in the payola indictments were Kenneth Garable, 31, $100 block Wynnefield Ave., Philly, president of Gamble-Huff Record, Inc., and Leon Huff, 33, Meryl Lane, Cherry Hill N.J., vice president of Associated Music, Inc., and also of Gamble-Huff.

Gamble-Huff, a major record company, is located in the 300 block of S. Broad St. in downtown Philly.

On Friday, the two talented, young millionaires issued this statement through a secretary: "We deny all charges."

"The Sound of Philadelphia" is distinctive enough to be instantly recognizable in virtually every black community in the nation.

It is heard weekly throughout the United States as the background sound of "Soul Train," the dance program televised in California.

The records of Philadelphia International Records are manufactured, advertised, distributed and sold by CBS, according to Robert Romano, assistant U.S. attorney in Newark. He said Gamble and Huff operate Gamble-Huff Records and Associated Music, Inc.

However, both are record companies that record under the name of Philadelphia International Records, Romano said.

* * *

Others indicted include Earl Shelton, 34, of the 1900 block Latona St., Philadelphia, who was former business affairs manager for firms associated with Gamble and Huff.

Benjamin Krass, 55, white, of the 2400 block Pennsylvania Ave., Philadelphia, a former partner in Gamble Records and a principal of Krass Brothers Clothiers, at 937 South St. in Philadelphia.

Edward Richardson, also known as "Lord Gas," 36, of the 2700 block S. Island Penrose, Philadelphia, national director of promotion for Assorted Music.

Harry J. Coombs, 39, of the 100 block of Ivy Lane, in Glen Mills, Pa., who is executive vice president of Assorted Music.

Also, a North Jersey man, identified as Joseph Medlin, 50, of Teaneck, in Bergen County who is national director of promotion at Polydor Records.

* * *

Other big names snared include Clive J. Davis, 43, New York, fired when the payola probe began in 1973 as Columbia Records president, charged with cheating the U.S. out of $45,000 in income taxes.

KENNY GAMBLE

LEON HUFF

Nat Tarnopol, 44, of Purchase, N.Y., president of Brunswick Record Corp., along with five other Brunswick officials and reputed Mafia figure Carmine "Lilo" Wasell Denoia, 49, of New York, who were charged with cheating recording artists and song writers out of more than $371,000 in royalties in order to make payola payments.

None of the disc jockeys involved was named in the indictment because, according to First Assistant U.S. Attorney Clay Undercofler, the investigation "was aimed at the other end of the business-the companies and people who offered the bribes-end because the disc jockeys were very cooperative."

* * *

The Philadelphia defendants allegedly spent in excess of $25,000 to get disc jockeys, program directors and others in several cities to plug records on the air.

Disc jockeys also allegedy were invited to come to Philadelphia to get free clothing from Krass Brothers, known in television commercials as the "Store of the Stars."

The clothing involved was valued at more than $5,000 according to the indictment.

More than $3,200 was about $2,300 in airline tickets, the indictment stated.

U.S. Attorney Robert B. J. Cleaver presented evidence to the grand jury in Philadelphia. He was assisted by his first assistant, J. Clayton Undercofler III, and by Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Meltzer.

The investigation is continuing and it is possible that some broadcast officials could face criminal charges at a later date, according to Undercofler.

U.S. District Court Judge John B. Hannum signed the indictmentm He set bail at $500 each for the defendants, but said he allowed them to sign their own bond when they were arraigned.

Except for Medlin, who was not charged with mail fraud, the defendants were indicted on all counts. Romano said the conspiracy charge goes back to 1969.

Bleak future predicted for minority businesses

NEW YORK — The man from the Chicago Economic Development Corporation (CEDC) was painting a bleak picture for minority businessmen and women in the coming future.

The man from the Interracial Council for Economic Opportunity (ICEO) was both dourful and positive.

A publisher was critical, but also offered a possible opportunity for turning things around.

And members of Third World countries urged minority businesses to invest in their programs.

These diverse outlooks were offered at the recent two-day symposium held at the Americana Hotel on "The State of the Black Economy." Under the subject "Survival in the Face of Crises," 350 speakers and delegates from all to take a look at the future, over the country gathered to take a look at the future. One hundred were students.

The symposium was co-sponsored by CEDC, a Chicago organization formed 10 years ago, a nonprofit organization that assists minority enterprises, and ICBO, a national nonprofit minority business assistance organization with headquarters in New York City and councils in Los Angeles, Atlanta, New Orleans, St. Louis, Newark Dallas and Washington, D.C.

Garland C. Guice, executive director of CEDC, was the speaker who saw a bleak picture for minority businessmen. Despite the signs that the national economy would begin to swing upwards, "we know that the minority economy — and particularly the black economy tends to lag 90 to 180 degrees out of phase with the general economy," he observed.

* * *

"Th s means," continued Guice, "that three-fourths of the black community will still be suffering from a recession nine to 15 months after the rest of the economy has recovered."

Malcolm L. Corrin, national president and chief executive officer of the ICBO, was equally blunt.

"The state of the black economy is a paradoxical contradictory, conflicting, confusing but positive dilemma," he said. But then he went on to point out the growth of various minority businesses and the help his agency has been able to give to many.

He said his organization has generated in the neighborhood of $160 million of debts and equity funding, $50 million to $75 milloin in the procurement of goods and services for its clients from both the public and private sectors and has tens of thousands of inquiries providing management and technical assistance to well ove 10,000 clients.'
