CONSUMER CORNER

You can't judge an orange by its color

Don't pay premium prices for perfect orange color UNLESS you are buying for decoration.

In many fresh fruits and vegetables, depth of color is a good key to flavor and even some nutritional values.

But with oranges, the color rule doesn't apply. Some oranges come in shades of St. Patrick's Day green, especially in Summer. During the growing season, some go from green to orange and then back to green again at the edges. And the 'regreened' ones are just as ripe, juicy and tasty as their sisters from the very same tree.

The color is brought out by cool speels, which sometimes don't hit the Florida groves. California fruit almost always has the deep colors of cool nights but citrus from both coasts 'regreens' as the clorophyll climbs back up through the limbs to the flowers which will produce next seasons' fruit. So look past the color, pitch the peels and enjoy what's inside for all its worth
