Woven's year

Recommendations set

The World Plan of Action (for women) sets forth recommendations aimed at promoting equality between the sexes in such areas as educational and employment opportunities, legislative measurss, political participation and leadership, health and population.

With only five more months to go before IWY ends. That seems a lot to accomplish in so little time.

But don't you men worry your pretty hesads about that.

The plan contains recommendations for national and international action over a 10-year period — starting with 1975.

Ms. Heide, the former NOW president and a behaviorist from Vernon, Conn., thinks she has just the organization in mind for the world action to continue for more than 10 years.

She would call it Women of the World.

WOW.

So don't anyone out there go into a breath-holding act over the IWY World Plan of Action for Women.

It probably won't go away. And that's good. It's meant to help women everywhere — especially those in really bad straits, starvation and all the rest.

Some women's problems are so dreadful, in fact, that hearing about them in detail is enough to make a believer out of a male chauvinist.

Solving those problems and setting up machinery to prevent the same for future generations of females is what IWY's really all about.

Prince James

wich Village. In Baltimore his designs are being worn by the most fashionable dressers.

Butta, one of nine children of Mrs. Blanche Williams of Baltimore has worked for some of the best known New York fashion spots.

In 1973 he worked as assistant designer for Hazen Sportswear; 1974 as production manager, Junior Petite, and 1973-74 World Premiere.

Educated at Dunbar High School, Baltimore Institute of Art and FIT, N.Y., Butta formerly owned his own boutique in downtown Baltimore.

The "Prince" began his fashion career at age 13. "It began as a necessity. I wanted clothes but couldn't afford to buy them, so I had to make them.

"My mother had an old sewing machine at home and lused to play with it. I took a home economics course in high school and I enjoyed it. I began designing and creating fashions for friends and started taking custom orders. It was like a part-time job," stated Butta.

And now just 13 years from when it all began, Butta is in the fashion capital of the world, exploring bigger and better opportunities in the fashion industry.
