'Cannonball' dies, never awoke from stroke

GARY, Ind. (UPI) — Cannonball Adderley, 46, one of the jazz world's most outstanding and best known saxophonists, died today in Gary's St. Mary Mercy Center.

Adderley, whose Christian name was Julian, died at 8:30 a.m., in intensive care at the hospital where he was taken July 13 after suffering a massive stroke while at a party whose guests included Gary Mayor Richard G. Hatcher.

Adderley's wife, parents and sister-in-law were at his bedside when death came, according to Don Baxy, public relations director for the medical center. Baxy said death was due to "cardiac arrest."

Adderley was born in Tampa, Fla., Sept. 15, 1928. He was a student at the U.S. Naval School of Music in Washington in 1952 and later attended Florida Agricultural and Mechanical College.

He married Olga James, a singer, in June, 1962.

Adderley directed the band at Dillard High School at Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., from 1948 to 1956. He made his jazz debut at Café Bohemia in New York in 1955 and with his brother, Nat, organized a band for tour the same year.

* * *

In 1957, Adderley joined the Miles Davis Goup and George Shearing's band two years later.

He recorded for Capitol Records from about 1958 to 1964. He appeared at the Newport Jazz Festival, the New York City Jazz Festival and Jazz at the Philharmonic programs with various tours.

Adderley was leader of the 36th Army Jazz Band in the early 1950s.

He received several awards including Encyclopedia Jazz Yearbooks in 1956, New Alto Star of the Year Award from Downbeat Magazine in 1959, top artist on campus poll in 1968, first alto Playboy Magazine aware from 1962 to 1971. All star award the same years, and Downbeat Magazine reader's poll from 1968 to 1970.

Adderley's father was a jazz cornetist. Cannonball studied brass and reed instruments in high school at Tallahassee, Fla., from 1944 to 1948.

* * *

While he was in the army, he directed the band at Ft. Knox, Ky., 1952-53.

His odd nickname evolved from "Cannibal," a name given him by high school pals as a tribute to his huge eating capacity.

Adderley was critical and in intensive care from the moment he arrived at the hospital. He never regained consciousness and was kept alive by artificial means. His death was a foregone conclusion almost from the time he was hospitalized.

Adderley was in Gary for the city's weekend Founders' Day celebration. He was to have taken his sax and five fellow musicians to Indianapolis for the opening of a one-week booking at a cocktail lounge the day after he became ill.

Survivors include his wife, Olga; parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Adderley, and brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Nat Adderley.

Rev. Carter, former Baltimore pastor, returns to say farewell to his aunt

The Rev. Samuel Carter, 66, formerly of Baltimore, was in the city this week to attend funeral services of his aunt, Mrs. Ella Janet Clark Carter, 93.

He is now the pastor of Clair Christian United Methodist Church in Chicago. The Rev. Mr. Carter is strongly committed to the concept of church involvement in the secular affairs of his community.

The Clair Christian Center operates 11 community outreach programs. The programs are partially funded by a combination of federal, state, city and private funds. The operating budget is more than two and one half million dollars annually.

The Clair Christian Center provides service in the areas of day care, diagnostic clinics and has a methadone drug maintenance program.

He is considered as a scholar of sorts and his work experience ranges from service as a probation officer to director of research and survey for the Baltimore area Methodist Church.

Mrs. Perry M. Jones was Sharon pioneer

Mrs. Perry Magnolia Jones, 78, a pioneer member of historic Sharon Baptist Church, was given last rites there on Monday evening.

The minister, the Rev. Dr. James L. Moore, officated and gave the eulogy.

Also participating were Dr. Alfred C. D. Vaughn, pastor of Grace Memorial Baptist and president of the Baptist Minister's Conference and Alfred E. Cheek, chairman of the deacon board.

The Rev. Mr. Moore said he could describe Mrs. Jones' "great life" in one word, that of a great sense of Christian thankfulness, which he said is one of the lost virtues of this day.

He added, "I have been in this home many times. The last time was when the daughter gave a birthday party in her honor, and always Sister Jones was thanking God for his benefits."

* * *

Deacon Cheek called the deceased a "consecrated, dedicated servant of God" and Dr. Vaughn in his prayer offered thanks for her "dedicated service."

All speakers alluded to her "loving, useful and productive life."

Music for the one hour service, which followed the family hour, was by the church Senior Choir in which Mrs. Jones as well as her daughter sang. Mrs. Jones is also a charter member of the Gospel Chorus.

Soloists were Mrs. Patelle G. Harris and Chester Ford.

During the Family Hour, members of the Morgan State University Choir sang, under the direction of Dr. Nathan Carter, who was at the organ.

Mrs. Jones' grandson, Carl King, is a regular member of the college choir.

National attack on sickle cell fades, local groups carry the ball

By Bryan D. Holt

An indefinite truce has apparently been called in the full-scale, nation-wide combat on sickle cell anemia launched four years ago.

* * *

Numerous situations ranging from political greed to fly-by-night screening services have been held accountable for the decline of the attack.

The program against the hereditary blood disease which prevails among blacks, was begun in 1971 amidst much fanfare and support from the White House, Congress, and the media.

* * *

Dr. Robert Murray, Howard University staffer and nationally-respected researcher on sickle cell, said that the programs were an opportunity for politicians to do something in an election year.

Office-seekers hopped on the band-wagon in droves as the disease began to be described as "dread and neglected burden of the black community."

Dr. Murray states, "For black politicians, it was a chance to do something for their people without offending the white community."

Whites also used the program as vehicle into black popularity.

* * *

However, after spending $140 million dollars, making sickle cell a prominent issue in the 1972 national elections, federal funding for research is now in doubt.

The AFRO has learned that a $19 million cost reimbursement contract that the State Dept. of Health and Mental Hygiene held with the U.S. government expired this year and probably will not be renewed.

As politicians turned to face other problems, however, the fight against the terrors of sickle cell anemia continues to be fought by small local organizations.

Two of those groups, the Baltimore Committee on Sickle Cell Anemia and the Baltimore City Schools Area for Exception Children, sponsored and educational workshop last week at the Sheraton Inn.

* * *

Mrs. Mary Claybourne, head of the Committee, told the AFRO, "The workshop was a success with many teachers, parents, and medical personnel attending.

"We had several speakers who delivered addresses on what can be done about the disease has been identified. That is important."

Mrs. Claybourne noted that a problem with many screening services is that the disease is detected and then no follow-up is given.

She advocates awareness and counseling above all things.

She stated, "When our organization began, we had to blow sickle cell out of proportion and then bring it into the right perspective.

"Many people became upset when they find they have sickle cell, but we explain to them that there is really no need to worry."

The Baltimore Committee works in cooperation with local hospitals, and other screening agencies.

* * *

Mrs. Priscilla Hawkins of the Exceptional Children division, told the AFRO that many advances had been made in the area of education for children with sickle cell anemia.

They are no longer heavily restricted in activities due to cooperation and counseling assistance from doctors and other consultants.

She says that the work with sickle cell patients have proven so successful during the past year that the office is expanded its services to aid and counsel children with other chronic illnesses such as asthma in the future.

* * *

There has been much misunderstanding concerning sickle cell anemia since it became such an important issue four years ago.

Local authorities and organizations advise that citizens learn more about the disease so that they can better cope with the situation if it is found that a loved on has it.

Persons wishing more information may contact the Baltimore Committee on Sickle Cell Anemia at 889-1656.

In addition to his mother, Mr. Worsley is survived by three sisters, Misses Shirley, Lorraine and Debbie Worsley; three brothers, Larry, Michael and Dennis Worsley.
