INDOOR PLAYROUND is the special feature of the new Highlandtown Elementary School No. 215 at Pratt and Clinton Sts. in Highlandtown, East Baltimore. The building in a cramped area has the play area inside to give a measure of protection to the youngsters and exclude outsiders. Expected to be completed when schools open Sept. 4, the unusual place for happy recess time will be complete with sliding boards and other fun things. The concrete stpe-arrangement leads to ground level classrooms. Many happy days are scheduled for the youngsters who are fortunate enough to be assigned to Highland Elementary when school bells start to ring.

'Oklahoma' - Alive and Well . . .

Jeanette J. Davis

How could the Cultural Arts project hope to achieve uniqueness by presenting one of the oldest story lines — boy meets girl and has trouble winning her hand?

"Oklahoma" is almost plotless, one of the most corn fed productions to come from the 30's era of musical extravaganzas. There isn't a living soul who is not familiar with the strains of "Oh What A Beautiful Morning," "Surrey With the Fringe On Top" and the overpowering "Oklahoma." Would the 1970's audience and attitude would have difficulty plugging into this good old mid-West high?

The Urban Services Agency Cultural Arts Project seized a large portion of the mid-West drawl and turned this Rodgers and Hammerstein production into a true community event.

On June 25, over 200 BSC students from various high schools in the city poured into the Dunbar High School Complex into the Cultural Arts Project directly into the musical theater class. Under the expert direction of Hugh Carey and Mrs. Helen Bush "Oklahoma" took on an entirely new dimension.

Within hours the students became aware that their "work" for the summer was learning script, dance routines, choral numbers, set design, set construction, stage direction and so on.

Reactions ran the gamut from "I didn't know I had to sing" to "I'm quitting" to "Yeah, I'll try it." The weeks wore on. No one quit. Many sang. Even more danced. Still others were building. Strains of "Kansas City" and "Poor Jud" drifted through the halls of the music wing, the cafeteria and yes — the men's room. Indeed. The mood began to change.

In addition to the actual stage activity, these students learned theater and ticket management, costuming, advertising, promotion and how to find impossible items like a surrey.

This writer watched as a group of youngsters went from a lethargic sommoambulistic mob to an energetic, productive cast and crew.

On August 7, "Oklahoma" opened at the Dunbar Performing Arts Center complete with a twenty piece orchestra. The curtain went up but we were still not thoroughly convinced that this particular production would bring down the house. I was in for a rude awakening. The matinee went off without a hitch and the afternoon crowd rose to its feet with thunderous applause. However, none of us was ready for the effects of the Friday evening performance.

Mr. Carey's baton was raised at precisely eight o'clock and sophistication was the name of the game for the rest of the evening. The performers never missed a cue nor the musicians a beat.

Gigantic applause ranged throughout the house during numbers such as "Kansas City," "It's A Scandal," "It's An Outrage" and "Many A New Day." Jack Taylor as Curley and Richelle Brooks as Laurie warmed our hearts. We were captivated by the performance of Pamela Simcacek as Aunt Filler; Ivy Shrout as Ado Annie and Mark Pelekakis as Will.

Andrea Buchanan delighted the audience as Gertie while we really sympathized with the pathetic Jud played by Frank Hooper. The entire audience was captivated by the Groucho Marxian approach given to the peddler by Stephen Blackmore. I for one must face the fact then that it was not the story but the characterization that finally brought the audience to its feet as the cast took a professional looking series of curtain calls. This sophisticated audience shook the theater with its applause and haunted the lobby with requests for another performance and a road tour.

So while we remain mystified by the real story contained in "Oklahoma" it is no longer important for this cast learned much about legitimate theater. They experienced the world of work and above all realized how to pull the bits, pieces and themselves together to create a production.

After all, isn't that really what Cultural Arts is about?
