Hattie Taylor honored for 'teaching way of love'

By Cynthia K. Grandison
Reflections Staff Writer

Ever since she was 15, children and the elderly have been Mrs. Hattie Taylor's favorites.*

Now 64, some 49 years later, she was honored for her tireless efforts at promoting harmonious relations between all ages living in the Latrobe Homes which has some 702 families.

Because of her work with the East Baltimore community, Mrs. Taylor was saluted as President of the Year. And, the arrival of her birthday, August 8, also made the party appropos.

Danielle Scaffe, age 1, one of Mrs. Taylor's seven great-grandchildren, sat at the guest table and cooled off with soda pop.

Though she has been plagued by a series of illnesses, she was feeling better and looked well when she discovered her friends and neighbors had come out to the surprise affair.

She said she thought her son, Calvin Williams, was taking her to dinner.

Well, he did.

There were over one hundred guests and plenty of food.

"Mother Taylor" as she is affectionately called, has served as President of the Tenants Association and the Senior Citizens for 10 years.

She is also First Delegate to the Resident Advisory Board, (RAB). All are organizations within the Latrobe Homes.

Part of her time is spent working with the children at the nearby recreation center and making freeze cups, cakes and other treats for them from her own money.

A religious woman, Mrs. Taylor said, "There is no such thing as a bad child."

She holds, children will do wrong, but adults must "love them through it all."

At the beginning of the Saturday affair several letters and poems of appreciation were read and the "Black Atmosphere Band" sang a jazzy Happy Birthday song.

In talking about Mrs. Taylor's community involvements, one cannot help mentioning the individual programs. Labrobe residents have a lot going for them.

For example, senior citizens like Ms. Louisa Reeves crochets baby booties and jackets and sewing bibs for all of the newborns.

The sick and shut-in can count on Mrs. Taylor and others' generosity.

A resident of the 800 block Abbott Court and a member of the Apostolic Faith Church, this community-minded lady has been active for 15 years and cared for her mother, Mrs. Mary Williams, in addition to working, for many years. She was married to Samuel Taylor.

Says Del. Clarence duBurns of the second district:

"I've been knowing Mrs. Taylor 25-30 years. She's got a feeling for people and she does a darn good job. She took care of the sick (and) walked all the way up to Johns Hopkins with people."

Between Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Sara Causion (AFRO Mother of the Year), he said a lot is accomplished.

"She has an ear for the senior citizens. They can really depend on her to get things done.

"She's never asked me to help her" it's always for someone else," added Mr. duBurns.

Mrs. Mary Edges, Baltimore City Bureau of Recreation said:

"She's religious. She's sympathetic. She's conscientious. She has a will to do."

Friends in attendance were: Mrs. Betty Purnell; William Brown; Edna Williams; the Rev. Ted Heyburn, St. James and John; Joseph James, Social Service Housing Authority; Herman Johnson, security chief, Housing Authority.

Mrs. Maxine Mayes, director, Latrobe Recreation Center; Del. Clarence duBurns; Sen. Robert L. Douglass; Lee Douglas, director, Model Cities Council A; Mrs. Delores Ringgold, neighborhood coordinator. Members of the Black Atmosphere Band are: Angela Wright, Earl Darby, Nathaniel Singletary, Bruce Hill, Frank Hill, Joseph Powell, Bruce Atkinson, Earl Himby, Edward Blue, Chuck Williams, Leon Hill and Leon Purnell, (manager).

The affair was sponsored by the Travels Club with Mrs. Geneva McKee, president and Mrs. Francis Jones, secretary.

"Mother Taylor," president of the Latrobe Homes Tenant Association, 900 block E. Madison Ave., was presented with a trophy for her unselfish contributions as a community worker. Del. Clarence duBurns (R) gives the trophy as Del. Lee Douglas (L) looks on.

Annapolis Links

By Eloise Richardson

The Annapolis Chapter of Links, Inc. has initiated its activities toward grooming a group of junior and senior high school girls, who will be presented at its 12th annual collition in November.

These activities aim to expose the girls to an experience in group dynamics and serves to develop self-esteem before they begin their training program and make their bows.

In May, a slide presentation on "Careers for Girls" was offered by Mrs. Aloetha Stubbs, task force teacher at the Board of Education.

Also Dr. and Mrs. James Ballard were presented in an impromptu concert of guitar music and singing.

In July, the group listened to a lecture by Carroll Greene Jr., director of Special Projects, Maryland State Commission, Afro-American and Indian Culture.

He spoke on the history of Highland Beach, an Anne Arundel County beach community, where the girls were picnic guests at the home of Mrs. Phyllis Langston.

This community started with Mayor Charles Douglas II, son of the famed black statesman, Frederick Douglas and his wife. The complete history, prepared by Mr. Greene appeared in the Maryland Magazine.

A current event in the planning will be a fashion show. The program will also include the presentation of special talent and community participation. The title of the show will be "Inner Vision the Reflection of You."

Preston Hebron, vice-principal of Tyler Heights School, assisted by Miss Bedelia Green, will be in charge.

Debutante candidates serving as chairpersons are Karen Mathis, Rita Parker, Cheryl Banks, Larue Forester, Anne Calvin, Robin Bufkin, Cheryl Galloway and Lucille Hoyt. The program will be presented at Annapolis Senior High School on September 14.

Girls to be presented this year are Lorita Pye, Lucille Hoyte, Larue Forester, Cheryl Galloway, Delphine Bryant, Greta Lee, Crystal McGowan, Cheryl Banks, Karen Mathis, Lori Wilkerson; Tonya Abney, Robin Bufkin, Anne E. Calvin, Rita Parker, Cheryl Turner, Cindy Scott, Joyce Cheltenham, Marylyn Weldon and Cindy Snowden.

Mrs. Lulu Hardesty is chairperson for the cotillion.

Happiness Through Health

by Otto McClarrin

(EDITORS' NOTE: Mr. McClarrin is director of Community Relations, Office of Communications and Public Affairs, Health Services Administration of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in Washington, D.C.)

What does summertime bring to your mind? Lying at the pool or beach? Hiking in the mountains? Exploring the wilderness? Camping out? Sightseeing adventures?

Any one of these can live up to your dreams as long as you avoid those well-known fun-spoilers: sunburn insect bites, heat exhaustion, poison ivy. Armed with a few simple precautionary measures, some common sense, and a knowledge of how to cope with such, you can keep them from sabotaging your family's holiday.

Here are some ways Public Health Service experts suggest for coping:

Insect bites are likely to be a greater threat with bans on widespread use of insecticides. Protective clothing and repellants are the best preventives if you're likely to be exposed. Some insects are merely nuisances.

Baking soda compresses and ice usually suffice to relieve the discomfort after making sure the stinger is out. Ticks, black widow and brown recluse spiders present a more serious threat of severe, though rarely fatal, illness.

In tick-infested areas, wear long sleeves and tight pants, then check the body carefully and often. Ticks not yet attached should be brushed off and killed.

Pull attached ticks away gently so the head and mouth won't remain imbedded. Use tweezers or in stubborn cases try a hot knife, blade or pin, nail polish or iodine. The danger from ticks is Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever (actually more prevalent in the Southeast now).

The two poisonous spiders (black widow with red hourglass marking on its abdomen and the brown recluse with a violin-shaped marking on its back) are unlikely to bite unless they have been disturbed in their hiding places—such as window sills, foundation cracks, garden debris, etc. If you are bitten consult a physician at once.

Heat exhaustion is a threat if you overexert on a hot and humid day. Dress in light, porous, loose-fitting clothing and step up your salt intake at such times. In the event of mild heat exhaustion (tired, headache, nausea) or if it's severe (perspiration, weakness, pale and clammy skin with possible vomiting and leg or arm cramps), the treatment is the same.

Lie in a cool place and take cool salted water (a teaspoon per quart). More rare is heat stroke—a serious condition marked by high fever and hot, dry skin. The fever should be reduced rapidly by sponging with water or alcohol.

Sunburn can be avoided by common sense—building up gradually those first days at the pool or beach. Arm yourself with a good sun lotion or cream. Toddlers and anyone with sensitive skin need extra protection from the searing rays.

If you do get a burn, cool or tepid baths with colloidal oatmeal will give some relief as will topical local anesthetics such as Solarcaine. A serious burn, of course, needs medical attention.

Poison ivy with its clusters of three shiny leaves, is easy to recognize. Teach your children to recognize it—and poison oak and sumac, too. If you have been exposed, wash promptly (preferably within 3 minutes) with soap and water to remove the oily substance that causes the trouble. Everything exposed—clothing, pets, tools—should be washed, too, but handle them cautiously until they've been scrubbed.

If a rash develops, simple home remedies will relieve the discomfort until it clears up, but if the reaction is severe, have your doctor treat it immediately. Topical local anesthetics such as Solarcaine will give relief, and calomine lotion will dry the blisters and oozing. Remember that the blister fluid won't spread the rash—only the original plant secretion. So if it spreads, relaunder anything that may be tainted—clothing, sheets, towels.
