Outerwear for men 'loaded with style'

Next season's outerwear and sportswear are so loaded with the look of the great outdoors that all this is missing is the scent of the pine needles in your nostrils, the spray of salt water on your cheek, and perhaps the thrill of bumping into Euell Gibbons as you wander about the countryside enjoying Nature's wonders.

This is the strong impression projected for Fall-Winter 1975 apparel by the Men's Fashion Association.

Chip Tolbert, MFA's Fashion Director, observes that the great new outdoor looks — great to look at as well as great to wear, and functional as well as fashionable — draw chiefly for their inspiration from the legendary symbols of men in the wilderness: the Cowboy, the Seaman, the Lumberman, the Hunter and the Sportsman.

There's even an outerwear group which has been tagged the "Marlboro Coats" after the cigarette commercial of the same name and the rugged shearlings worn by the hard-riding plainsman featured therein. Included in this group are corduroy rider jackets and authentic denim jean jackets with a shearling-type lining.

Other important trends include warm but very leightweight downfilled nylon coats in both plain and quilted versions ... furs, both real in non-endangered species and imitation ... pile linings, for warmth and for interesting trims ... suedes and leathers, in traditional colors as well as new treatment .... hooded parka models .... and the current use of fashion in multiple layers.

Another highlight is an authentic "Churchill" coat, an exact replica of the nautical blue reefer worn by Britain's great World War II leader. Other important coat looks include pea coats in green loden cloth and camel hair; thigh-length leather coats in both smooth skins and pig suede; corduroy coats enhanced by a gun patch and bellows pockets; and very interesting: slicker-cloth trench coats.

Some "item" jackets of importance, which fit into no larger category, included outerjackets in chino and poly-vinyl cotton, a quilted Chinese workman's jackets, "bomber" jackets of World War II vintage donned in polyurethane and leather blousons, and wool plaids.

The "big top" look of new overshirts, comes up for Fall 1975 in denim, corduroy, wool checks and plaids, and tweed, as well as ultra-suedes and fake suedes, and camel pullovers with dropped shoulder styling.

Among other very exciting concepts are Leisure Suits adapted from the very popular casual style to cold weather outdoor fashions. These include 100 per cent polyesters, flannel with a designer trim, gabardine with suede trim, and brushed denims — some in an ombre effect and others in the popular faded look — and corduroys in biege, aubergine and rust, all ideally keyed to the fall season.

Understand your heart

About 28 million Americans, it is estimated, have some form of heart or blood vessel disease, and each year more than a million persons die from these ailments. While there is still much to be learned, medical science today can help many people avoid a cardiac catastrophe and live longer and in good health.

In UNDERSTAND YOUR HEART, a new Public Affairs Pamphlet, Theodore Irwin summerizes what is known about how the heart functions, major types of heart troubles, who the victims are, the significant risk fiactors, what can be done to help heart patients. He also offers guidelines for "living to your heart's content." UNDERSTAND YOUR HEART is available for 35 cents from the Public Affairs Committee, 381 Park Ave. South, New York, N.Y. 10016.

In this concise booklet, Irwin dispels the common notion that "high-powered executives" are the most likely victims of heart attacks. Heart disease afflicts men and women of all ages and all social ethnic backgrounds — though some are at greater risk. It has, for example, been found that black Americans "are twice as likely as whites to have high blood pressure, which greatly increases their chances of heart attack."

Other factors that, especially in combination, contribute to heart disease are overweight, high blood pressure, high cholesterol and triglyceride levels, smoking, lack of exercise. And in those risk factors Irwin finds the clues to improving your chances of avoiding heart disease:

- get a medical checkup
- control your weight — and help your children start doing so early
- exercise regularly, in moderation
- if you have high blood pressure, follow your doctor's orders
- eat a prudent diet — low in saturated fats
- quit smoking

Irwin describes how the healthy heart's two pumping stations "in a masterful design" push the blood through the body, to bring nourishment and oxygen to all the body's cells. Heart disease, he points out, is no one ailment; a score or more of different conditions "affect the heart and the blood vessels . . . and may lead to heart attack." Irwin explains a number of these conditions — some resulting from slowly developing hardening and narrowing of the blood vessels; others the result of illness; still others, congenital defects.

Heart attacks often give warnings first. Irwin describes a number of them and urges immediate medical attention and tells what steps to take until professional help arrives. For those trained to do it, he summarizes how and when to give first aid with Rescue Breathing or Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation.
