Bar group opens victim counseling service office

PHILADELPHIA — The Victim Counseling Service of the Philadelphia Bar Association, the city's first broad-based victim assistance program, has opened a regional office in the Institute of Black Ministries, 1200 N. Broad St., in North Philadelphia.

Acting as a clearinghouse for victims of crime, the Victim Counseling Service is designed as a systematic and coordinated approach, involving a full-range of services—legal, counseling, education and referrals—which are all supportive in nature of victims of criminal acts.

The Philadelphia Bar Association program was inaugurated in December with the opening of the first VCS regional office in Room 206 of the Town Hall of Germantown, Haines St. and Germantown Ave. in the city's northwest section.

A central office is also operating in Room 419 of City Hall Annex.

According to Thomas N. O'Neill Jr., chancellor of the Philadelphia Bar Association, the VCS staff will initially be working within the North Philadelphia community to develop an interest in victim assistance and put the victim in contact with sympathetic neighbors.

"In part, VCS will fulfill the role of an ombudsperson, directing the victim to an appropriate social service agency," explained Chancellor O'Neill. "In the case of possible civil remedy, the North Philadelphia victim may be put in touch with the Bar Association's Lawyer Reference Service."

Charles Bradford, a North Philadelphia resident who formerly served as an instructor in the CEP Orientation Program of OIC and has held positions at the Youth Study and Youth Development Centers, has been appointed by Richard Syre to direct the VCS North Philadelphia operation.

Another North Philadelphian, Diana Zayas-Cartegena, has been named assistant director of the new regional office. A graduate of the University of Puerto Rico, Ms. Zayas-Cartegena has worked as a translator, elementary school teacher and vocational counselor.

The North Philadelphia office features a staff of two full-time paralegals and several part-time counselors, trained in both the social service and criminal justice systems to meet the diverse needs of crime victims.

Assistance will be provided to victims on a walk-in basis and by telephone referrals weekdays between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

The telephone number is 763-2770.

The trained VCS personnel will, either in person or by telephone, counsel victims to inform them of all their rights and legal obligations, including the right to recover insurance proceeds; the right to possible civil actions against the assailant; prevention of future victimization, and the effect that failure to report a crime may have upon some of the victim's rights, as well as society as a whole.

In its brief history, Victim Counseling Service has provided assistance to more than 300 victims of crime. Problems have ranged from the victim's need for medical assistance to complaints about the feeling of frustration created by our complex criminal justice system. The projected need for assistance in the North Philadelphia community is greater because of its denser population and higher crime rates."

The service, which is provided to victims of crime and their families at no charge, was created by a $180,000 grant to the Governor's Justice Commission by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration of the U.S. Department of Justice, along with matching funds of $30,000 from the Philadelphia Bar Association.

VCS personnel cooperate with the leaders and members of criminal justice agencies and citizens organizations designed to offer aid to victims, including the Victim Witness Unit of the Philadelphia District Attorney's Office and Women Organized Against Rape.

In addition, the staff is currently coordinated with the Bar Association's existing Lawyer Reference Service to take advantage of LRS' 27 years of experience in the area of counseling, and as a
