Two in daring daylight holdup of crowded Clinton Ave. market

NEWARK

On the warm afternoon of Saturday, May 22, around 4:15 p.m., with nearly 300 customers shopping in the Foodtown supermarket, 739 Clinton Ave., Newark, two gunmen, one armed with a shotgun, the other with a revolver, announced a holdup and herded the patrons to the rear of the store and ordered the employees to hit the floor.

The stunned patrons quickly obeyed the order, even as other persons parked outside waiting for shoppers, never realized what was going on.

Immediately upon entering, the two still unknown suspects, disarmed the security guard on duty, and he was ordered to join the rest of the employees on the floor.

Newark bandit squad detectives Frank Huff, Harrison M. Coleman, and Lennie Simmons, said on Friday, May 28, that there had been no arrests, but indicated they were working on some "good leads."

The detectives stated that the pair of gunmen, after moving the huge crowd of customers to the rear as one waved his sawed-off shotgun, one of the pair vaulted over a barrier into the main office and raided the safe that just happened to be open.

The second gunman, it was reported, attempted to raffle the tellers cash registers, but couldn't find the right key and gave up the try.

Inside of the office, detectives reported, the suspect dumped some trash from a plastic bag and used it to stuff the homes stolen from the safe.

Warning the 300 customers and the prone employees to stay put, the two men fled through a rear alley and reportedly escaped on foot through S. 14th St. It was not known whether they were in a vehicle.

The mass holdup was the second of its kind within the past month, the other being armed robbery of the Upper Room Freewill Baptist Church at 428 Springfield Ave., when two gunmen passed the collection hat among the congregation while holding a .357-Magnum at the pastor's head.

In the latter instance, the three arrested suspects, including one juvenile, had sat on the front row during the services until after a hymn and prayer before brandishing the weapon.

Detectives stated that in the Clinton Ave. Foodtown heist, that there was no attempt to rob any of the patrons.

U.S. brass back South Africa deal

By John W. Templeton
AFRO Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — Administration officials told an incredulous Senate subcommittee that a quarter billion dollar nuclear reactor sale to South Africa would "keep open the dialogue" between that country and the U.S. and downplayed adverse reactions from other African states.

However, the South African government sources citing growing impatience with congressional hearings, announced it will purchase the country's first two atomic reactors from France, suspending negotiations with General Electric.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., retorted, "We don't need to sell nuclear reactors to have a dialogue. They want a dialogue."

The Illinois Republican said South African officials he talked to during a trip there last month showed a strong desire to discuss the problems of southern Africa with the United States.

Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, chairman of the Senate African affairs subcommittee told the AFRO afterwards, "The effect is that African states are going to say once again we had good working relations in Lusaka and once again you've done the opposite."

The senators reacted to remarks by James Blake, deputy assistant secretary of state for African affairs, who said the sale and accompanying loan guarantee would bring about "cooperation and understanding which will be important in achieving the aims the Secretary (of State Henry A. Kissinger) put forward in his Lusaka speech."

That speech spelled out U.S. policy in Africa and included a firm commitment towards majority rule in southern Africa.

Pressed on the matter, Blake said, "The Department of State expects and intend that the sale of these two reactors is essential to the maintenance of good relations with South Africa."

Blake added that the deal is "obviously important to the South Africans."

Blake said only "there or four" African nations had formally complained. Upon further questioning, he admitted that one of those nations was Nigeria, the richest black African state and a major source of U.S. oil imports.

He did Nigerian foreign minister had voiced his government's displeasure over the move by State Department officials during a recent trip to New York.

The reactors would be supplied by General Electric Co., which has applied for a Nuclear Regulatory Commission export license.

By law that application can't be granted until the State Department and other agencies review it.

That review has not been completed yet, said Blake, although he emphasized the positive side of the deal in his remarks.

Part of the package is a $250 million loan guarantee to four banks who will finance the purchase from the Export-Import Bank, a U.S. government agency.

That guarantee is the largest ever granted in Africa, said bank vice president, Stephan Minikes to the subcommittee.

Minikes said the guarantee is five times greater than any previous granted for a South African deal. Payment would be due in 1995.

Sen. Clark asked Minikes to reconsider the assumption the South Africans will be in power then.

The subcommittee also focused on the possibility of U.S.-supplied fuel being used for weapons by South Africa, not a violation of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, which limits the spread of atomic armaments.

Myron Kratzer, an assistant secretary of state the senators U.S. imposed safeguards would keep the South Africans from diverting fuel to offensive uses and warned that other countries with less strict guidelines would make the sale if the U.S. didn't.

However, he left open the possibility that the South Africans might use fuel made in their own uranium processing plant and admitted the U.S. had not tied the reactor sale to South African compliance with the nonproliferation treaty.

During questioning, he also said the argument that other nations might make the sale would not be a "controlling factor" in the State Department opinion on the sale.

According to Kratzer, the U.S. first entered an atomic energy agreement with South Africa in 1975. Amendments in 1967 and 1974 provided for the export of nuclear reactors and nuclear fuel, respectively.

Under present law, the administration spokesmen noted Congress can't block the sale if the Nuclear Regulatory Commission decides to grant the export license.
